The Market.

"The best Christmas we ever had," is the almost universal report of Denver florists. This comes as a surprise, when one considers that for the last few months there has been a constant cry of "hard times." Perhaps it is on account of hard times that florists in general fared so well. Many people who in other years have been able to buy elaborate presents, this year confined many of their gifts to plants and cut flowers as being most suitable for the amount they were willing to spend.

Azaleas and cyclamens were the best sellers in the plant line. Poinsettias were in demand, but there were few really good ones. Begonia Lorraine was pushed to the rear, and several retailers lost heavily on this plant. It was late in coming into bloom, was put into a warm house and forced. Not being thoroughly hardened off before being sent out, it dropped its blooms and was altogether unsatisfactory. It will probably be a difficult matter to sell it to the same customers next Christmas.

During the early part of the week cut flowers were scarce, but on Saturday and Sunday there was a noticeable increase in the cut, and late Christmas day some of the retailers had stock left over.

American Beauties were off crop in nearly every establishment, and the supply of these came mostly from Council Bluffs. The call for tea roses, except in red, was light. Violets were not priced as high as in previous years, being $1.50 per hundred instead of $2. They were about equal to the demand.

Of greens, such as fern leaves, smilax and leucothoe, there was a plenty, everybody having ordered an extra supply. Christmas greens and wreaths were sold out, notwithstanding the report circulated early in the week that there was a great surplus.

Since Christmas, business has kept up remarkably well. There have been a number of society events which have called for elaborate decorations, corsage bouquets, etc.

Various Notes.

The regular monthly meeting of the Colorado Florists' Club has been postponed from Monday, January 1, to Monday, January 15. The entertainment committee is working hard to get up a fine program, and a good attendance is anticipated.

The store at 1710 Welton street, which was started a short time ago by Ricketts & McDonald, has been closed and the fixtures moved.

C. Zbendin has given up the store at Fifteenth and Lawrence streets. After being closed a few days it was opened by Robert Scheffel.

Mrs. L. A. Dunsmore had a better Thanksgiving and Christmas this year than ever before.

W. C. Walter vacated the store at Fifteenth and Cheyenne Saturday, December 30. His business will be confined hereafter to wholesale and retail trade at his greenhouses.

The Market.

Christmas business was quite good, although rainy weather interfered to a considerable extent. This checked trade in flowers for wearing, but stock for table and other household uses, and for decorative purposes, was in great demand. The supply of roses, carnations, violets and other flowers was pretty well cleaned out, red roses being especially scarce, but there was a surplus of Easter lilies, valley and so-called spring flowers.

Prices for the holiday trade were medium, compared with the same period of previous years. Florists say that the demand for potted plants was good and that there seems to be a tendency on the part of the public in Washington, Philadelphia and other eastern cities towards increasing popularity of plants, as compared with cut flowers. This is said to be due to the fancy prices for cut stock that have prevailed in some quarters during the holiday season in former years, and the fact that the public would rather buy plants than cut flowers, when prices of the latter are high. Now the pendulum seems to be about to swing the other way, since holiday cut flowers brought only medium prices, while potted plants have advanced.

Orchid prices are reported high, but stock is going pretty well. An oversupply of narcissi is noticed on the market. Local florists expect nothing extraordinary this week, but florists are looking forward with optimism to the 1912 business. If only the money market will loosen up some, there should be no cause for complaint.

Various Notes.

George C. Shaffer did a big holiday business. His New York violets and gardenias were among the finest seen here in a long time. Mr. Shaffer's special holiday packages were most attractive; ribbons, boxes, cards and other accessories were thoroughly in accord with the holiday spirit.

Manager McKissick, of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., went to Philadelphia last week and spent several days talking over business matters. He says that his firm's business throughout the east has been good.

is showing some of the first Trumpet Majors, grown by Albert Esch, and they are fine. Manager Albert Schnell, of this company, is up and about again, despite his attack of blood poisoning. The doctors think that he may entirely recover without an operation. Although his pain has been severe and his left arm is bandaged across his body, Mr. Schnell feels that he is lucky to be able to start the new year so well, considering the serious results that sometimes follow rose thorn pricks.

The flower shops were brilliant with special New Year's window displays. An especially attractive one was a huge clock dial of immortelles, with the hands pointing to the "magic hour" of 12, midnight, in a rustic frame laced with a profusion of cattleyas and other orchids. This was exhibited by Z. D. Blackistone.

Special New Year's baskets of flowers and other designs were shown by Small, Gude, Kramer and other downtown florists.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago; First VicePres., M. H. Duryea, New York City; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.

MELVIN S. GRIFFITH, of Griffith & Turner, Baltimore, is at Mt. Clemens, Mich., taking the baths.

BURPEE is one of those who believe carrot is worth real money this year. His retail catalogue shows it.

THE Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, is running 120 pea picking machines, half of them in the Chicago warehouse.

IT is said that the principal pea growers have booked 1912 contracts about up to the limit of their stock seeds.

ARNOLD RINGIER, secretary of the W. W. Barnard Co., has left Chicago for another of his swings around the circle to the coast.

THE Ozark Seed Co., E. L. Kline, manager, Springfield, Mo., says the Christmas business was the heaviest in the history of the concern.

JOHN WILCOX, who has been in charge of the farm of the W. W. Barnard Co., near Chicago, is making contracts to go into the pea growing business for himself in Idaho.

IT appears that a large part of what seed isn't grown under nature's conditions in California, soon will be produced under irrigation in the intermountain country.

ROBERT SYDENHAM, the Birmingham seedsman, was elected president of the National Sweet Pea Society of Great Britain at the annual meeting at London, December 8.

R. H. SHUMWAY, Rockford, Ill., purposes that the seed buyer shall be able to pick the Shumway catalogue out of the pile, no matter how many may be on top, so he has made the 1912 book 12¼x13¾ inches. It can't be covered up.

FLOWER seeds are becoming an increasingly important item with many of the wholesale seed houses, but good flower seed men are made, not born, and it is difficult to pick up capable help for this department.

ONE of the well posted growers estimates the 1911 Wisconsin pea crop at three to three and one-half times the quantity of seed planted, some varieties, of course, having yielded two or three times as much as others.

THE talk about the altitude of pea prices is rather misleading—the big prices usually are the offers of would-be buyers who can not locate the stock. The market gardener will not pay over $2 per peck for peas, except Gradus and one or two others, and the m. g. lists as a rule keep to where the customers can do business as long as stock lasts.

THE Portland Seed Co., of Portland, Ore., purposes to build another large warehouse early in the present year. The company now has tentative plans drawn for a 5-story, reinforced concrete building, which will be built on the half block owned by the company on East Alder street, between East First and East Second streets. This half block adjoins the company's present warehouse.

The Hamburg steamers are bringing large shipments of grass and clover seeds, practically all consigned either to order or to custom-house brokers.

It develops that here and there through the country there are quite a few surpluses of Dutch bulbs, and a few French, mostly stock held for retail sale until it was too late to move it at wholesale.

The important novelty of the year appears to be a bush melon, catalogued by Peter Henderson & Co. A lot of seedsmen have been looking for something of the kind and are more or less surprised that it has been found.

When peas are planted under the conditions that maintain in the northwest, they make a wonderful growth and the characteristics of the Wisconsin grown stock seed are modified in many ways. Those who have tested the seed think that for one year the western stock will answer canners', market gardeners' or any other purposes, but that it probably will be necessary to send Wisconsin grown stock seed west each year or completely lose the type.

MR. SMITH FINDS JOKE.

"Progressive" California offers to admiring citizens an exhibition of legislative sagacity in the two bills, Senate No. 1 and Assembly No. 1, filed December 23 and 24. For example, these bills require the California consignee of a 5-cent mail packet of field, garden or flower seeds from another state to notify the Commissioner of Horticulture, or his deputy, of its arrival, and the packet must be carefully guarded, until inspected for insect pests by the quarantine guardian, or other officer. Also that packet must bear a label giving the names of seed, consignor, consignee and country where the seed was grown. Nobody ever claimed that any injury from insects, etc., could come from any or at least most of these seeds. For violation, a pleasant penalty is six months in jail and also a fine of $500.

A nice little joke is that every constituent of a California congressman receiving his packet of free seeds must perform the same duty.

If state legislatures would use more care in the consideration of these restrictive regulations of legitimate commerce, perhaps we would have fewer laws, but those would be quite enforceable, which can not be said of a single state seed law now on the statute books. It is a sufficient comment on the haphazard American method of grinding out laws to state that I have a record of ninety-eight state laws declared unconstitutional by the highest state courts within a period of two years, 1906-1908. Curtis Nye Smith.

SUIT OVER SEEDS.

From Petersburg, Va., comes the following press report: "A verdict in favor of the defendant was awarded last night in the case of Jacot & Mullin, of New York, vs. the Grossman Seed Supply Co., in which the complainants were suing the Grossman Co. for $1,700, the balance due on a shipment of seed which the defendants refused to pay for, alleging that the seed was worthless. The court's decision ordered the refund of more than $1,300 already paid the claimants. Jacot &

Mullin shipped the Grossman Co. a supply of seed last February. The seed was sold to Chesterfield and Dinwiddie farmers, who this fall refused payment, alleging that the seed was worthless and would not sprout. The Grossman Co. accordingly refused to pay the New York concern from which it had secured the seed, the balance of $1,700 due on the shipment. Jacot & Mullin sued and after the case had been in court for a week a verdict was rendered December 21.''

The Market.

In speaking of Christmas trade, there seems to be one general complaint, and that is on the weather, which was dull and rainy for three weeks preceding Christmas. Naturally stock in many lines was somewhat short for holiday trade, just the time when the florists needed the most abundant supply. On the other hand, business was fine and the demand exceedingly great. Roses, and especially Beauties, were scarce, while the call for high-grade Beauties and Rhea Reids seemed to be unceasing. The same condition prevailed among the carnations. Poinsettias, however, were in good supply and filled in well as a substitute for other scarcer varieties of stock. Yellow and white narcissi and Roman hyacinths were also abundant, and sold well where a cheaper flower was needed. Lily of the valley, cattleyas and violets, used in Christmas corsage

HORSESHOE BRAND LILIUM FORMOSUM

From the islands south of Japan. These bulbs vary in quality and owing to the mixture of varieties do not flower uniform. They are much earlier, however, than any other lily varieties and are especially recommended for florists who do not have much heat, for Easter forcing 1913 (Easter being March 23rd). The Horseshoe Brand Formosas will contain as little mixture as possible in 1912 and will be very carefully graded. They are practically free from disease.

HORSESHOE BRAND HARRISII

From the celebrated fields of Messrs. Stephens Brothers, Paget, Bermuda. This strain of Harrisii is improving every year and will be very suitable for the early Easter, 1913. The prices have been made extra low in small sizes because there are more good quality bulbs of small size than there are large ones, and as bulbs over five inches are not desirable for planting purposes, the prices have been reduced specially to dispose of the crop. They are very good bulbs—well grown, sound and properly packed, and should be a very good investment for the grower this year. All Harrisii prices are quoted f. o. b. New York only. Terms three months or 2% 10 days. A special cash price will be granted for cash received before July 1st. Any deliveries which may be for any proper reason unsatisfactory can be returned to us at once, at our expense, and money will be promptly refunded.

Try GOLDEN QUEEN and PRESIDENT TAFT for forcing.

One customer writes under date of May 25th: —

"The Golden Queen that I ordered from you were planted in a carnation house on February 7th, and we are now getting fine spikes and handsome flowers. I find your variety to be one week earlier than Mrs. Francis King, ten days earlier than Augusta and two weeks ahead of America. They have been perfectly satisfactory in every way."

bouquets, sold well and easily pleased the most critical. Besides the general run of Christmas orders, there was a large amount of funeral work, which readily consumed all of the giganteums, callas and Melpomene obtainable. Wild smilax, holly and all decorative greens cleaned up and magnolia wreaths for the cemeteries sold well. There seemed to be an increasing demand this year for made-up Christmas baskets of poinsettias, Boston ferns, etc. In summing all things up, this Christmas was a good one, and came up to last year, for where it fell short on roses and carnations, it made up on poinsettias and bulbous stock.

The weather last week was a mixture; it was a little sunshine and lots of shadow. Stock continued to be scarce and the demand kept up, with but little difference in prices; thus the week was a busy one all through. New Year's business was also good, and while orders were not so numerous as for Christmas, still the florists are entirely satisfied. Accompanying the New Year's demands came a rush on funeral work, which kept all hands busy. The year has made a good beginning and we hope it may continue.

Various Notes.

Warren G. Matthews sent out to his customers a large Christmas card of his own design and wording.

During the holidays some fine orchids were seen at the store of the Advance Floral Co., in the Arcade.

Mrs. Elizabeth Young is on the sick list again, and up to the present time it is impossible to state how serious her illness may be.

The Miami Floral Co. says that it found an unusually large demand for white flowers this Christmas, due to the fact that many of the churches used white exclusively for decorations. They had an abundant supply of yellow and white narcissi, also poinsettias, that sold with ease.

The Heiss Co. says that Christmas was a good one, as they cleaned house on everything. They found a large sale for poinsettias and pot plants, the demand being so great for the latter that it was impossible to supply all.

Mrs. B. Haschke tells us that she had a good Christmas and New Year's trade and, while carnations and roses

LILIUM HARRISII

(THE BERMUDA EASTER LILY)

LET US SUPPLY YOUR WANTS IN LILIES THIS SEASON

We think we can make it to your advantage to do so, as regards both quality and price.

The stock that we offer is not gathered indiscriminately from all kinds of sources, but is grown for us by a few selected growers whose stocks have been worked up from the true, original stock. In order to insure the health of the product, the bulbs are not grown on the same field oftener than one season, other crops being grown on the field the preceding year. The ground is thoroughly manured when the previous crop is grown, leaving it in a high state of cultivation, and when the lily bulbs are planted no fresh manure is used; this prevents disease and insures a crop of strong, healthy bulbs.

In addition to this, we do not dig our bulbs as early as they are usually dug, but leave them in the ground until they are thoroughly ripened and matured. When Harrisii is good it leaves little to be desired. There is very little, if any, stock obtainable as good as the stock that we are offering. We are supplying only this one grade of selected stock and when this is disposed of we shall have no more to offer.

While the quality of the stock that we offer is of the highest, our prices are as low as, or lower than, the prices of those who offer the ordinary stock gathered from indiscriminate sources. We are sure buyers will find our stock very satisfactory, and much more so than the Japan-grown Longiflorum, which has badly deteriorated in recent years.

Bear in mind that we were the original introducers of Harrisii in Bermuda, and that we have exceptional facilities for obtaining our present supplies. Also take note that the smallest bulbs that we offer are 6-7 inch bulbs, not 5-7 inch, as usually offered.

6- 7 inch bulbs, 335 to the case,	$15.00 per case;	full thousand lots, $ 40.00 per 1000
7- 9 inch bulbs, 200 to the case,	16.00 per case;	full thousand lots, 75.00 per 1000
9-11 inch bulbs, 100 to the case,	18.00 per case;	full thousand lots, 175.00 per 1000

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Officers for 1911-12: Pres., J. H. Dayton, Painesville, O.; Vice-pres., W. H. Wyman, North Abington, Mass.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-seventh annual meeting, Boston June 1912.

WHAT glad acclaim would greet a plan that would substitute national inspection and control for state inspection and control of the nursery business!

C. W. ZORN, who, with his brother, was in the nursery business for a number of years at Roff, Okla., has removed to Ada, Okla., and will establish a nursery there.

THE Western Home Nursery Co., of Weatherford, Tex., has filed a deed of assignment for the benefit of its creditors. T. A. Wythe was appointed assignee. The total liabilities are estimated at $8,748.16 and assets at $5,340.99.

STORRS & HARRISON Co., Painesville, O., recently received an importation invoiced as spiræa, on which the collector of customs at Cleveland assessed duty at twenty-five per cent as nursery stock. Under protest, the merchandise was held to be dutiable at $2.50 per thousand as astilbe.

BECAUSE practically all nurserymen are opposed to the so-called Simmons bill providing for a quarantine against infected or diseased nursery stock, it does not follow that they all are opposed to a plan of federal inspection and regulation so devised that trade interests shall be properly safeguarded.

THE East Lawn Nursery & Development Co. has been incorporated at Sacramento, Cal., for the purpose of conducting a wholesale and retail flower, nursery and plant business and maintaining acreage for development purposes. The capital stock is $25,000. The directors are Robert Armstrong, S. M. Hulett, Peter B. Newman, J. W. Mitchell and A. Duhem, all of Sacramento.

THE Hoopes Bros. & Thomas Co., of the Maple Avenue Nurseries, West Chester, Pa., recently added another farm to the nursery grounds and a large force of men have been employed in preparing the newly acquired land for the firm's use. An unusually heavy spring business is expected, and the preparations made for the shipment of stock are the most extensive in the company's experience.

NURSERY IMPORTS.

The imports of what the statisticians of the Treasury Department classify as "plants, trees, etc.," for the month of October this year and last were as follows:

October, 1911	$425,746

THIS VALUABLE NOVELTY

will be in much request as a weeping Rose, for its glowing color, appearing as it does in the early days of July, when our Roses are in the zenith of their beauty, gives just that touch of color needed in weeping Roses. Both Hiawatha and Excelsa are a week or two later, and Crimson Rambler and Rubin are not good when grown in this form, so that American Pillar cannot fail to be most useful. There is quite an elegance of growth, almost as graceful as the true Wichuraianas, from which it must surely be a hybrid, and the splendid foliage, retained beyond Christmas, is in itself quite a picture. The flowers of American Pillar are very persistent, a valuable feature in a single Rose. They are fully three inches across and of a lovely rosy crimson color, with large white eye. They are produced in nice clusters, not, of course, so large as Dorothy Perkins, but quite large enough to make a fine show—The Garden, England.

AMERICAN PILLAR HAS HOSTS OF FRIENDS

Tenants Harbor, Me., 2-3-11.—Gentlemen: Many thanks for your beautiful catalog. I want to tell you that I have one American Pillar which I have had for four years. It grows beautifully in this climate (way down on the coast of Maine) and is very much admired by everyone who sees it. Very truly yours.—Mrs. J. H. D———.

New Castle, Del., 11-12-1910.—Gentlemen: The American Pillar Rose you sent me is the finest of them all, and I have some ten different varieties. It was covered with thousands of blossoms, and the original plant covers an arch over ten feet high, and ten or twelve feet long. I have many Roses, but the American Pillar is the most admired of them all. I never find any trouble with mildew or insects. Your Roses are better than you claim and I am a most enthusiastic believer in Conard & Jones Company. Very sincerely.—Mrs. Selden S. Deemer.

Comment from the London Garden.—"A most notable feature in this glorious display (Temple Flower Show in London) was the New 'American Pillar' Rose. The large and attractive rich rose pink blooms are produced in immense clusters, the white centers of the blooms adding to their attractiveness.—Florists' Exchange."

The best pink rambler is American Pillar; it is an extraordinary grower, its foliage is darker in color than any other, and it is more evergreen than any known kind. It produces immense clusters of large flowers from 1½ to 2½ inches in diameter. This variety created quite a sensation when shown by us last year; it has been awarded the R. H. S. Award of Merit.—Hobbies, Limited, London, England.

"The Rose is of too recent introduction to write otherwise than generally about it. Its strong points appear to be its fine growth, lateness and showy flowers, and its really magnificent foliage, which clothes the stem down to the base, the pillars looking in Autumn as though clothed with ivy rather than a Rose foliage. Its special uses are as a tall pillar or rambling over a pergola, arch or screen."—From 1911 Rose Annual of the National Rose Society.

Prices.—Strong 3 year (4 to 5 ft.), $35.00 per 100; 2 year (3 to 4 ft.), $25.00 per 100; plants from pots, hardened, 2½ inch, $10.00 per 100; f. o. b. West Grove.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

The holiday rush is over and everything is back to normal. The florists are unanimous in their statement of results, reporting a substantial increase over former years. Almost everything was sold out clean, at good prices. All available help and all the space were taxed to the utmost and it would have been almost impossible to handle any more trade. The chief demand was for poinsettias, though the supply of Lorraine begonias was never finer and they cleaned out at a good profit. Azaleas, cyclamens and basket arrangements found favor among all classes. Carnations, especially the red varieties, were cleaned out early. There was a good supply of mums. Violets, valley and orchids were particularly scarce. Green goods also moved well. The shipping trade was unusually brisk, which is an important factor to the retail trade.

Various Notes.

T. A. Chervenka, formerly with T. L. Metcalfe, at Madisonville, Ky., has taken charge of the rose section at the greenhouses of Clarke Bros.

Martin & Forbes have purchased another delivery car, of a larger type. They found it a valuable asset during the holiday rush. E. R. C.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Market.

Christmas, 1911, is now a thing of the past and although it is not yet time to have full details of the interesting event from all the trade in this neighborhood, a fairly accurate summary of the business can be given. The weather, although miserably dry and dusty, was favorable for shoppers and the stores in the retail districts were well satisfied on that score. With only a few exceptions, there was plenty of stock of all kinds. About three days before Christmas the growers raised prices about thirty per cent on almost everything, but as they had been selling flowers at low rates for several months preceding, buyers could not object much at this time. From all sides come reports that there was just about enough stock brought into town to fill requirements, and since then, owing to the close cutting and the severe cold snap, all lines are scarce. The cut poinsettias from the south, as well as the home-grown pot stock, did not move as well as one year ago, and prices were a shade lower in consequence.

Roses were good, and the same can be said of carnations, with prices practically similar to those of last season. Valley and orchids were in good demand, but mums showed the lateness of the season and had only a fair sale. Daffodils, narcissi and violets moved rapidly. In pot plants azaleas, heath, ferns, palms and mixed pots of many kinds were sold out completely by Christmas eve. The larger sizes of palms and ferns were the slowest to sell.

In many ways trade was a repetition of Thanksgiving; there were more sales made, but they were usually for smaller amounts. However, there is no question but that the aggregate of 1911 was fully as good as that of 1910. Red berries and all sorts of green goods had a phenomenal sale and many retailers found these the best paying portion of the holiday business.

Various Notes.

Mark Daniels will lay out a 200-acre park for Frederick Sharon, at Menlo Park, during the coming season.

A. J. Cook, of the Horticultural Commission, is in town for a few days.

A. Gyfelbrecht, of the Alameda Floral Co., was struck and badly injured by the local train in Alameda, December 23. His horse was killed and his wagon, which was filled with plants, was completely demolished.

Frank Manahan, formerly with the Spokane Floral Co., of Spokane, Wash., is in San Francisco, with the intention of permanently locating here.

The Eddy Street Floral Co. has surrendered its lease in the Examiner building, and the premises will be opened by the United Cigar Co. G.

SEATTLE, WASH.

Christmas trade was fully up to expectations, all the stores having a large stock and every one of them being as busy as could be. The day falling on Monday this year caused the busy time to last longer than usual, many of the stores having all they could do to handle the trade Sunday as well as Saturday. Friday the weather gave promise of a more than usually seasonable Christmas, but the sprinkle of snow that fell on that evening was quickly melted by the sunshine and warm wind of the two following days, so that we had our customary mild Christmas weather. The majority of the florists claim that trade was much better than last year, one of the leading houses stating that their business was fully a third heavier than last season.

The large number of pot plants that are now given as Christmas presents caused the supply to be pretty well depleted by Sunday, subsequent sales pretty well cleaning up the balance. Cyclamens were in fine shape and nearly all sold out at from $1.50 to $2.50 each. Poinsettias, primulas, geraniums, palms and ferns all sold well at good prices. In cut flowers the demand was heaviest for carnations, good reds bringing as much as $3 a dozen, other colors selling from $1.50 up. Some fine Nonin and Maud Dean chrysanthemums were selling at $6 per dozen, but the majority of the stock showed the effect of being held rather late. The finest poinsettias ever put on the market here sold freely at $6 a dozen. Roses were not overplentiful, most of them being quickly taken, the best bringing $6 a dozen. There seemed to be a total absence of any local roses. Violets were plentiful, as were Paper Whites and Romans. Orchids, as usual, were scarce and in good demand.

The stores were, as a rule, more elaborately decorated than in former years at this season, some of them making up in ribbons what they lacked in flowers. The result, however, seemed to justify the increased outlay, so that florists here can look back upon Christmas, 1911, with no small measure of satisfaction.

Various Notes.

Sam Graff, who has been in his present location on Second avenue since last Easter, has sold his lease of the store, his intention being to move farther down town.

Frank Bell is contemplating growing kale for his next Christmas crop. The plants he sold this year were bonanzas, all right.

Hollywood Gardens had some large decorations this week, one in Christensen's hall being especially effective.

Lily growers are busy getting some of their stock in crop as fast as possible for funeral work. T. W.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The Market.

As outlined in our brief report last week, the Christmas business was of the most satisfactory and encouraging character and everyone connected with the trade has reason to remember the season of 1911 with feelings of intense satisfaction and confidence in the future. It has again been shown, without the possibility of doubt, that our city is capable of much better things in the florist's business than have ever been seen or done here yet, and it is up to the trade generally, retailers, growers and wholesalers alike, to work for the good of the business as a whole.

High prices are not always an unmixed good. It is all very well to clean out second-rate American Beauty roses at $25 per dozen, but the question of satisfaction to the ultimate consumer is as important as that of present profit and before the retail trader can hope for the best results a broad, honest policy will have to be followed consistently. Growers will have to improve their methods and retailers will have to be content with a fair profit. Then the great American public will enter a flower store as it does a department store, confident that the best possible is being done for its interests. We are glad to see that this spirit is about and that the hold-up policy of by-gone days is dying out.

The new year is no better time than any other for making good resolutions, but it is at least as good, and any old time is good for keeping them. At least the time following a holiday is a good one to make note of what is needed for another season, both by growers and retailers.

During the holiday just passed there was a decided shortage of nice little decorative stock suitable for making up into baskets, also of a moderate priced line of pot plants, stock that could be retailed at from $1.50 to $2.50 and show a good profit to all concerned. This is a matter for the grower. Then the retailer ought to see to it that the stock he has is as well displayed as possible. One or two samples of prettily dressed plants or well executed baskets in the window excite the curiosity and admiration of the buyer better than a window full of stock so closely packed that its individuality is lost.

Various Notes.

A fire at the Homer Laughlin place a couple of nights before Christmas completely destroyed the propagating house and its contents, and but for the prompt work of the Hollywood fire department it would have spread to the other greenhouses and lath houses. James Taylor, the gardener here, had a fine lot of young stock in the house, which it will take some time to replace.

The H. N. Gage Co. reports a banner holiday business. Among the interesting offerings was a batch of Dutch hyacinths forced in good time for Christmas. These, it may be noted, were from bulbs grown right here in California by Mr. Gage. It is only a trial, but the results obtained seem to indicate great possibilities in this line.

The Los Angeles Flower Market was a busy place during the holiday rush. A few items, such as seventeen tons of California red berries, with other decorations, greens and cut flowers in like proportion, were among the specialties handled here and so great was the demand from nearby cities and towns that all late telegraphic orders had to be cut in two. Five men were continually employed making up holly wreaths, Delaware, Vancouver and local stock being used. Paper Whites and Romans are in and daffodils are almost ready. Manager Charles Morton suffered from a severe cold and loss of voice during the rush, but has quite recovered. He reports orders on Asparagus plumosus seeds as heavy, the coming crop being almost sold out.

At the Dieterich & Turner place at Montebello, in addition to the cut of Killarney, White Killarney, Beauty and other popular roses, there has been a fine cut of Mephisto, a beautiful dark red, and Prima Donna, a fine, full, deep pink, for the holiday business. Several new and promising things are being tried out this season. Rhea Reid is still successfully grown here, none of the leaf troubles from which it suffers in many places being apparent. In the lath house are growing magnificent kentias and other palms and a grand stock of Philodendron pertusum (Monstera deliciosa) in fruit and flower.

There was not a more elegant or more seasonable window in the city than that of O. C. Saakes at Christmas. He used poinsettias, good azaleas and other fine pot and basket plants liberally, as well as quantities of rich scarlet ribbon artistically draped around good foliage plants. Nothing was crowded, yet the effect was full and delightful and we could conscientiously congratulate "O. C." on the excellent taste displayed.

The Freeman-Lewis store was a busy place all through the recent holiday season and in addition C. Lewis was kept busy with table and other decorations. Mr. Lewis says he was distinctly encouraged with the excellent business done at their first big holiday season. They deserved it, for the store has been mighty good to look at right along and the class of flowers handled has been the best at all times.

Frank Lichtenberg, of The Florists, has noted quite a difference in the amount of business done since altering the windows at the store and only the scarcity of good stock prevented more business being done at the holiday season just passed. As it was all records were beaten and everything sold out.

Wm. Haerle, of the El Reah Greenhouses, has been cutting a fine crop of good Cattleya Trianæ and C. Perci-

THE

Carnation of Real Merit

QUALITY MERIT

RAINBOW

WINNER OF THE BRONZE MEDAL

National Flower Show, Boston, March, 1911

A glorified Prosperity with all the good features of the Lawson Strain

With its name proclaiming its beautiful color combination, RAINBOW is one of the best, most profitable and remarkable carnations offered to the growers today. There are many reasons why you should grow Rainbow.

It is the best
It is easily propagated
It has a remarkably long, heavy, stiff stem
It has a strong, non-splitting calyx
It has large flowers of perfect form
It is a cool grower, doing best with 50°
It blooms freely, early, continuously
It is a good keeper and, best of all, it is a money-maker and sells on sight

These are strong statements, but they are facts which you can prove for yourself.

We realize 40% to 60% more profit on Rainbow than on any of the many standard varieties we have ever grown. It was sold last season exclusively to the largest retail dealer in New York City, who took our entire output.

The delicate shading from deep to light pink makes it both a superior display bloom and a general-purpose flower, commanding the highest price everywhere. Our claims to superiority in Rainbow are supported by 15 years of painstaking experience in producing and growing carnation seedlings of extreme merit.

PEDIGREE:—Morning Glory crossed with Lawson, producing white seedling, overlaid with pink. This resulting seedling crossed with Lawson, producing Rainbow—"profitable and prolific."

Our propagating facilities are strictly up-to-date. We can deliver a half-million rooted cuttings and guarantee them to be perfect and satisfactory in every way. Orders booked now for early delivery.

valiana. His poinsettias were good for Christmas, but the plants were lacking in finish.

F. R. Hills was in with a big cut of adiantum, smilax and other greens, as well as a number of good Boston and Whitmani ferns. His stock looks fine and he is getting well established.

Begonias of the Lorraine type and some good Adiantum Farleyense were well displayed in the holiday windows at the Angelus Flower Store, where a good business was reported, everything being sold out.

The Hayward Floral Co. did the banner business of its career in plants and cut flowers. Some good skimmias, azaleas and ferns were among the leaders in plants.

G. W. Smith, of the firm of Howard & Smith, of this city and Montebello, was married December 14, Miss Eleanor Bell, of San Bernardino, being the bride. The young couple left at once on an extended automobile trip.

Knight's Flower Shop was crowded with customers during the holiday rush. Indeed, there are few times when one can enter this store and not find everyone busy. The old Chatenay rose is still grown for winter work at the Gardenia greenhouses of the firm, Tom Wright saying he can force it with less heat and less trouble than any other kind, while there is always a demand for the flowers.

Want of rest seemed to be the only thing troubling Albert Knopf, proprietor of the Redondo Floral Co., after the holiday rush, the whole force having been kept on the jump almost day and night right through.

At Morris Goldenson's large quantities of fine azaleas and other pot stock were handled, as well as a fine line of cut flowers, and Mr. Goldenson described the holiday business as much the largest he has ever handled.

The Market.

Christmas is over and everyone reports the best business they ever had. Stock was short and most of the stores were sold out the day before and depended largely upon the plant trade for the late customers. Everything sold well, with the possible exception of Romans, which seemed to move slowly. The growers, as usual, had to divide their stock, giving each buyer only a part of his original order.

Plants and the made-up stock sold well at good prices, some exceptionally fine cyclamens being shown this year.

Various Notes.

While John Watson was in town helping out with the Christmas store work, his greenhouses were entered by some sneak thief, who carried away about 300 carnations.

The store of M. E. Hayden was forced to close for some time Saturday, December 23, on account of a shortage of stock.

The California Florists report business the best for years. This firm handled some fine poinsettias grown by the local firms.

The Market.

Now, as the old year closes, it is possible to give the real facts of the holiday business. The general feeling as to the Christmas business this year, both among retailers and wholesalers, is that it was the best they ever had. "Ahead of any of the previous years," is the general verdict of all in the trade.

The last week, too, was a good one. Stock was not any too plentiful and Christmas prices prevailed all the week. Judging from the way the trade bought on Saturday and Sunday, they must also have experienced a good New Year's business.

Stock all through the week was of extra good quality. Roses and carnations were plentiful, but were cleaned out daily. There was quite a good supply of long, fancy Beauties at $9 per dozen. On good red carnations the price went up to $10 per hundred. The supply of these was inadequate. Violets remained at $10 per thousand and the price cleaned them up daily; last year the price was held at $20 to $30 per thousand and the trade would have little to do with them. Bulbous stock was plentiful all the week. Paper Whites and Romans were down as low as $2 per hundred. Valley and lilies sold well and there were plenty of these to be had.

The weather was splendid all the week, but today we are having a good, old-fashioned winter blast. Prices, no doubt, will go down somewhat this week.

Various Notes.

The C. Young & Sons Co. has the decorations for the Imperial ball this week. Six hundred fancy Beauties will be used in this decoration. The firm reports a splendid Christmas and New Year's business.

On Monday night, January 8, the St. Louis Retailers' Association will hold its first meeting in the new year. President Sanders hopes the members will take notice of this and come out in full force.

Andy Hoffman, of the George Waldbart force, says that their Christmas and New Year's business was larger than in any previous year. Large blooming plants were in great demand.

The Engelmann Botanical Club will hold its New Year's meeting Monday night, January 8, at the Missouri Botanical Garden. Secretary Pring says there will be good features presented, which ought to bring the members out for this meeting.

Ostertag Bros. had a number of New Year's decorations at downtown hotels, which kept them busy all day on Sunday. The store business during the holidays was the best in years.

Charles Young has been laid up at his home with a bad case of the grip and escaped some of the hard work during the holidays at the establishment of C. Young & Sons Co., of which he is a member.

William Smith, of the W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co., says they never had such a holiday trade as this year. They cleaned up well in everything.

The work of arranging and decorating the interior of C. A. Kuehn's new building is fast nearing the end. The large new ice-box is completed and the arrangements have also been finished on the second floor, where supplies are now on exhibition. Mr. Kuehn says the local and shipping demand at Christmas was large and everything was cleaned up nicely.

Dave Geddes, of the Ayres Floral Co., reports that they had the greatest holiday plant and cut flower business the firm has ever had, with good prices.

John Wunderli, manager for the Alexander Floral Co.'s greenhouse plant at Clayton, is sending to this market a fine cut of roses. The varieties are Ward, Killarney, White Killarney and Richmond.

Henry Emunds, of Belleville, was over last week and he reports a great Christmas business for the Belleville florists. He still had a good supply of mum blooms for the holiday trade and they sold well.

Henry Berning and Geo. H. Angermueller both say they never had so large a demand for the holidays as this year. They cleaned out on everything except Paper Whites; of these there were too many in the market.

From what can be learned this early, a good number will go from here to Detroit next week to attend the rose and carnation meeting.

THE NEW YELLOW FORCING ROSE SUNBURST

This magnificent, giant yellow rose has been tested for three years in our benches; it stands head and shoulders above all other sorts of its color and will rank with American Beauty and the Killarneys in value and grandeur—because

It has a long, pointed bud, which can be cut tight for market. It is pre-eminently a long-stemmed rose. The stem is always stiff. It is free in bottom breaks. Is extraordinarily vigorous and healthy. Belongs in the class of Big Roses. Its keeping qualities rank with the best. Buds shipped from Richmond last December opened up perfectly in both Philadelphia and New York, where it scored 90 before the Florists' Club.

The color is orange-copper or golden orange and golden yellow, all intense shades, extremely brilliant in effect.

Come and see it growing; we have 8,000 of it benched.

Does splendidly out of doors; will rank high as a bedder. At the Chicago show, 1910, it was awarded the silver cup for the best new rose never before exhibited, and the judges unanimously gave it honorable mention additional. Has created a sensation wherever shown.

Raised by M. Pernet-Ducher, from whom we bought the American rights.

We have divided our stock with Mr. C. H. Totty, of Madison, N. J., to give eastern growers a chance to see it growing. Will be distributed March 1 in America by C. H. Totty and The E. G. Hill Co. Mr. Pernet will distribute same date in Europe.

The American price is $30.00 per 100; $250.00 per 1000 (own roots); $5.00 per 100 additional for grafts

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The weather in the week preceding Christmas was not cold, but cloudy, with little sunlight to bring the flowers out, and this continued through Christmas day, which was just cold enough to demand careful wrapping, but there was nothing to interfere with prompt, easy delivery.

Business was certainly on the boom with all the stores and greenhouses. Customers found no fault with prices and bought freely, with the result that approximately forty per cent more business was done this year than last, while prices were about the same. The heaviest sales were in plants, while cut flowers at the stores were rather short. Tuesday following Christmas there were six large funerals in town, which cleaned up every vestige of flowers from Christmas.

There were plenty of flowers excepting red roses and carnations, which are always in great demand at Christmas. There were poinsettias in plenty, azaleas, cyclamens, peppers, Jerusalem cherries, Romans in pans, Paper Whites and lilies, and all found ready sale at good, stiff prices, but yet not exorbitant.

As usual, Brown's Seed Store made a specialty of holly and monopolized that end of the trade. One notable fact is the decline in the sale of wreathing. There was less sale for it this year than ever before.

The plant sales were much larger than last year, with a bigger supply.

New Year's is not to be compared with Christmas, but trade was brisk.

Henry Smith has a new auto delivery car and it came in handy this year, with his increased business. G. F. C.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The Market.

Everyone seems well satisfied with the Christmas business. There was a good demand for both plants and cut flowers, although prices on the latter were rather high. Azaleas, poinsettias in pans, begonias, primroses and cyclamens sold well and nearly all were cleaned out. Wreaths, and all kinds of evergreens, including pine, laurel and holly, sold well.

Cut flowers were rather high; red carnations, which were somewhat scarce, selling at $1.50 per dozen, while roses went to $3. Violets and sweet peas were in good demand, while Paper Whites and stevia helped out.

The weather was ideal for delivering, little wrapping being necessary. Taken all in all Christmas, 1911, was as good as the previous year, and in most cases better.

Business last week was good, with but little change in cut flower prices. Funeral work is good.

Various Notes.

R. H. Woodhouse, Wm. P. Peirce, E. H. Chamberlain, Wm. H. Davenport, R. E. Nofftz and E. Y. Peirce had about all they could do, and made some excellent window displays.

Wm. E. Mosher had an especially nice lot of carnations for the holidays.

Peter Murray has a nice assortment of flowering plants.

S. S. Peckham is bringing in some nice snapdragons. W. L.

East Las Vegas, N. M.—Perry Onion & Son say: "Christmas business was fifty per cent better than ever before, partly due to our better location. Poinsettias, of which we had a fine lot, were the best sellers, and Christmas trees, wreaths and greens also sold well. Snow and zero weather made delivery difficult. Up to date we have had the worst winter that we have ever experienced; for two weeks before Christmas the thermometer went below zero every night, and such weather is, of course, decidedly unusual with us."

NEW YORK NOTES.

Woodrow & Marketos did a tremendous trade in flowering plants, handling many hundreds of azaleas, the Firefly being the favorite.

The National Florists' Board of Trade reports a highly satisfactory year. Their collection department has grown to double its volume in 1910.

J. Austin Shaw.

The annual banquet of the sales force of Wertheimer Bros. was held Tuesday evening, December 26, at the Cafe Martin, Fifth avenue and Twenty-sixth street. All present voted the event a pronounced success. The menu was varied, comprising all sorts of good things to refresh the inner man, including the cup that cheers. The menu cards were especially witty, each dish being appropriate to the foibles of a certain guest.

Lion & Co. express great satisfaction with last year's ribbon business and pronounce 1911 the most prosperous year in the history of the firm.

The John Young Co., at 52 West Twenty-eighth street, and Bedford Hills, N. Y., has made an assignment to Junius Pendleton Wilson. The company was incorporated in May, 1903, and John Young is president.

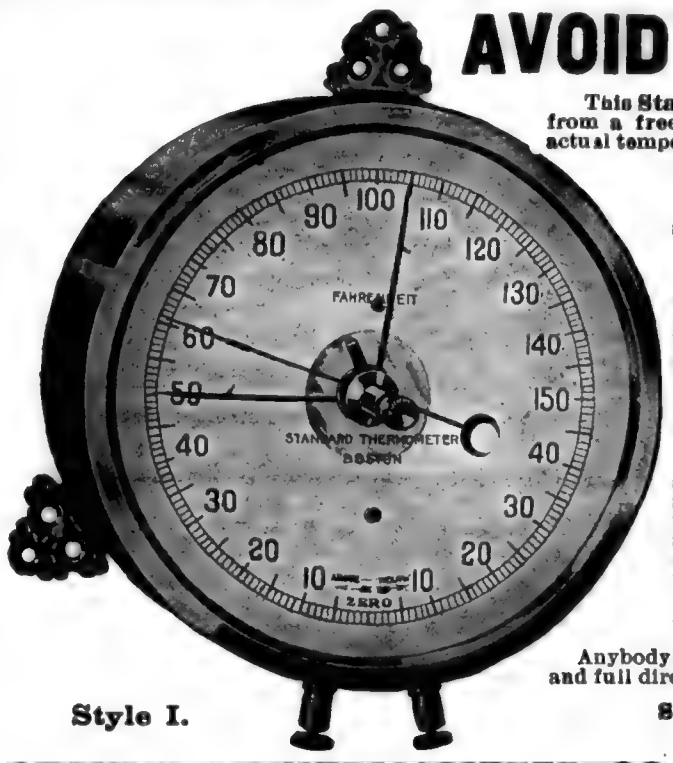
Greenhouse Heating.

RUN THE FLOWS DOWNHILL.

In your answer to an inquiry in The Review of December 14, page 123, you gave an explanation of the advantages that are secured by connecting the expansion tank with the flows rather than with a return pipe. At what part of the flows would you connect the tank? In my heating system the highest point is at the opposite end of the greenhouses from the boiler. I use a heat generator. I am troubled with air in the pipes. I find it necessary to let the air off every time I start the fires up at night. There are two air valves at the highest point in the piping. The heat generator is attached to the pipe leading to the tank and is taken from the return near the boiler. Please advise me as to the best way to get rid of the air. W. J. H.

There is always more or less trouble from the pocketing of air in the flow pipes when the uphill plan is used for the flow pipes. This is entirely done away with when the flows are run downhill.



All that is necessary in the present case is to raise the boiler end of the flow pipes so that there will be a fall of one inch in ten or fifteen feet. If this brings the highest part of the flows within a foot of the glass, it will be necessary to lower the farther end of these pipes, so that they will be at least twelve inches from the glass at the boiler end, and eighteen inches would be better. Then connect the present expansion pipe with the highest part of one flow and run a smaller pipe, to act as a vent, from this pipe to the highest point in the other flow pipe. The generator will act in the same way as at present and should be located, of course, on the expansion pipe, between the highest point in the flow pipe and the expansion tank. It will be a good thing to use a by-pass with a valve in connection with the generator, so that in mild weather the system can be run without pressure.

UNSATISFACTORY PIPING.

Enclosed you will find a diagram of the heating system in our greenhouse. In our coldest weather we had to fire hard to keep the north room at 50 degrees and the south room runs from 5 to 10 degrees colder, even with the door in the glass partition open. There are two valves in the piping for the south room, one where it leaves the heater and one where it enters the other return. We expected that we could heat the north room to 60 degrees easily and hold the south room down to 50 degrees, but we cannot do it, and think the trouble must be in the connection of the returns. The flows run downhill. The expansion pipe connects with the lower pipe at the end of the middle bench, about four feet from the heater, and when we are firing hard it gets warm for six feet up or more, which we also think is the effect of the crowded returns. This winter we are using both rooms for carnations and geraniums. Our location is central Michigan. J. F. T.

The sketch accompanying the foregoing letter shows a house 15x20 feet,

AVOID A FREEZE-UP

This Standard Thermostat will save your stock from a freeze-up. The indicating hand shows the actual temperature at all times. When it reaches either of the other hands it anywhere you please to locate the bell.

J. B. McFarland, of Granger, Wash., writes us as follows:—"I would like to say a word of praise for the thermostat. I have had mine and used it for two years in connection with the orchard heaters. It has always given perfect satisfaction. Although I am not over enthusiastic on the orchard heating proposition, I would not do without the frost alarm for twice the price.

"At this time of the year, when the weather is so uncertain, I place the thermostat in the packing shed. I can go to sleep at night feeling sure that if the weather gets too severe I will be awakened and can go and take measures to protect the fruit in storage: or if a fire should break out I would be aroused."

The Standard Thermostat is just as useful in the greenhouse as in the orchard.

Anybody can put it up—only a screwdriver needed—and full directions with each instrument.

WHAT THE USERS SAY ABOUT KROESCHELL BOILERS

Pontiac, Ill., March 16, 1910.

Gentlemen:—We have no trouble whatever in keeping a temperature of 50° to 55° in our carnation houses, and 60° in our rose houses, in the coldest weather. We fire once in three hours on very cold nights, and other times once during the night. The boiler has given excellent satisfaction; it is simply wonderful. We had a fire box boiler previous to this, but your improved system has it beat to death in every way. Your system of piping, together with your improved Generator system, has steam skinned to death in so many ways. We were on the market to buy high pressure steam, but after receiving such reports of your improved hot water system, we concluded that your experience was worth something, and have been delighted at the results, and so glad we took your advice and put in hot water instead of steam. Very respectfully, W. J. MILLER & SON.

with a lean-to 10x20 feet, built across the south end. In the larger house there are three coils, each of which contains five 1½-inch pipes. For these there is one 2-inch flow pipe, which connects with the coils at the south end of the house. A 2-inch return pipe leads to the boiler. In the lean-to there is one coil of five 1½-inch pipes. This is connected with the boiler by a 2-inch flow pipe, and the 2-inch return pipe is connected with the return from the other house about ten feet away from the boiler.

It is probable that a part of the difficulty, at least, is due to the fact that an endeavor is made to return all of the water from twenty 1½-inch pipes through a single 2-inch return, and the distribution of heat to both houses will be improved if the return from the lean-to is connected independently to the boiler. It would also be better if the expansion pipe were connected to the highest point in the system.

The sketch does not show the length of the coil in the lean-to, but it appears to be about twelve feet, so that there would not be more than thirty-five square feet of radiation in the house, whereas, to give a temperature of 50 degrees, there should be at least sixty feet, allowing one linear foot of 1½-inch pipe for every two square feet of glass. The house 15x20 contains about the right amount of radiation to give 60 degrees in zero weather, but it will probably be necessary to use a 2½-inch flow pipe and a return pipe of the same size, or connect each coil with the boiler, using 2-inch pipes.

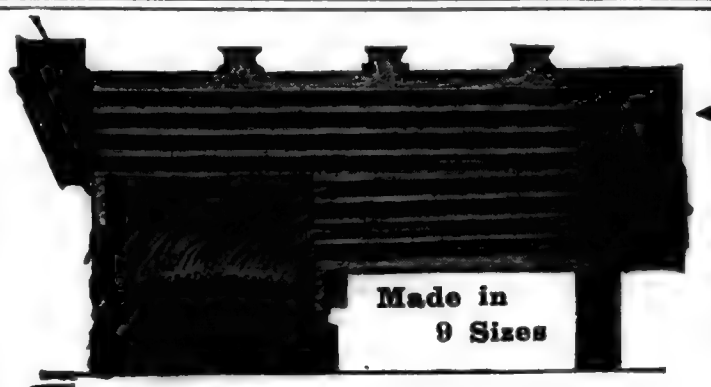
PIPING FOR A LEAN-TO.

I am enclosing a diagram which shows a range of four houses, each 28 x 200, running east and west, and protected at each end by a lean-to which extends north and south. My two Kroeschell boilers are located at the east side of the east lean-to and about an equal distance from the north and south ends of the range. Will you kindly inform me how to pipe the west lean-to? I wish to maintain a temperature of 52 to 54 degrees. In this part of New York state the outside temperature sometimes drops as low as 10 to 15 degrees below zero.



The main or flow and return to the entrance of the south house are both 6-inch. Crosswise, east of the south house, the flow and return are reduced to 4-inch and 3-inch. Would it be advisable to place a 4-inch tee just where the 4-inch flow is reduced to 3-inch and run a 4-inch flow along the south wall in the south house, to enter the west lean-to and there to branch off into fourteen or sixteen 2-inch pipes, which would enter a 4-inch return at the north end of the lean-to? The 4-inch return would run east along the north wall of the north house and from there to the boilers, seven feet below the ground level. All the houses slope about two and one-half feet from west to east.

A. J. P.

The plan shows a lean-to 150 feet long, fourteen feet nine inches high to the ridge and six feet to the eaves, at the west end of the four houses, but it does not show the width of this lean-to. However, the lean-to at the east end of the houses is sixteen feet wide and the west lean-to appears to be the same. Unless there is glass in the west wall of the lean-to, there should be no difficulty in maintaining 55 degrees if ten 2-inch pipes are used. This will afford about 900 square feet of radiation.

The 4-inch main, with which it is proposed to connect the 4-inch main for the lean-to, is now supplying about 700 square feet of radiation, and if the 900 feet in the lean-to and the 250 feet in each of the flow and return pipes are added, it will make some 2,100 feet to be taken off from the 4-inch main. The amount would be from 400 to 600 feet more if fourteen or sixteen 2-inch pipes are used in the lean-to, instead of ten, as recommended. At the best, the 4-inch flow and returns leading to the lean-to will have all they can do, but, if possible, the flow should connect either with the 6-inch flow or with the boiler. If this can be done, there should be no difficulty in heating the lean-to with ten 2-inch pipes as heating coils.

Pontiac, Ill.—W. J. Miller & Son secured, in time for the Christmas rush, a new Ford motor delivery car and they say, after giving the machine a trial, that they feel sure they have solved the quick-delivery problem. Christmas trade, they state, was fully equal to that of last year, with this difference, that the principal demand this season was for cut flowers rather than for potted plants.

PITTSBURGH.

The Market.

The old year closed in a most satisfactory way, as the holiday week had just enough going on to keep everyone from getting lazy. Flowers dropped down to the pre-Christmas prices the next day after Christmas and there was just enough business to clean up all stock that came in every day, which made it quite comfortable for the wholesalers. The reports of Christmas business after all had been footed up were more satisfactory even than the first reports. All the shop people seemed perfectly satisfied with their business. New Year's trade was divided between Saturday and Monday and was just about up to former years.

Various Notes.

There has been considerable comment on the action of one of our leading cemeteries, which has gone into the business of making cemetery decorations. It has been the custom of the older cemeteries to decorate and care for all graves for which an annuity has been left, but they have never gone into the business of making wreaths and other decorations in competition with the trade. In this case, however, cards advertising the cemetery and soliciting orders for wreaths, etc., were sent to all lot owners. This was the cause of considerable feeling, as it is said that cemeteries have no right to enter into a business of this kind, since they pay no business tax and the transaction of such business is contrary to the laws under which they have their charters.

The custom, among women, of wearing flowers, which had almost dropped out for several years, has certainly returned, but for some reason violets do not quite hold their own. Small rosebuds, valley, orchids and daisies are mostly in favor.

Yellow trumpet narcissi are about the only yellow flowers to be had just now and the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. has had a large sale for them.

T. P. Langhans will do jury duty during the first two weeks in January.

A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

BRAMPTON, ONT.

Christmas was undoubtedly the busiest time that Brampton growers ever experienced.

William Fendley had a large assortment of plants, which proved most acceptable to a hungry trade.

Richard Jennings cut twice the quantity of carnations sold at previous holiday seasons, and as the bulk of them were graded as No. 1 quality, he is well satisfied with the results. Mrs. C. W. Ward is a great favorite with this grower, and some Pink Delight, produced from cuttings purchased from F. Dorner & Sons Co., are quite thirty inches in height at the present time.

Despite the dull weather, the Dale Estate had some magnificent cuts, and the supply in the large cellar was depleted every evening. Orchids and Beauties were in keen demand.

Reports have it that the holiday weather was not at all Christmas-like, and florists throughout the Dominion must have thanked Heaven for this consideration.

Today, January 1, is election day here, and the citizens have decided, by a large majority, that the manager of the largest greenhouses in Canada is the best man that can be got as mayor of the town for the year 1912.

W. G. P.

Marysville, Kan.—H. R. Fisher reports that the holiday trade was much better than last year and everything was sold out clean. Carnations were scarce and roses, as a consequence, met with an unusually good demand. In the midst of the Christmas rush, four funerals, they say, were "thrown in for good measure, which made business rather lively."

Have Tomatoes on the market weeks ahead

Never mind the weather!

Your plants in hot-beds or cold-frames under Sunlight Double Glass Sash will not mind it

Between the two layers of glass in the Sunlight Double Glass Sash is an air space of 5/8 of an inch in thickness

Above the glass is winter weather—zero perhaps. Below the glass is warm earth and plants growing like May

The secret of it all, is that the air space between the two layers of glass being a non-conductor will not let the cold in or the heat out. It makes the Sunlight Double Glass Sash complete in itself. It needs no mats or boards. The only cover is the air sealed between the layers of glass.

You can have hot-beds and cold-frames with Sunlight Double Glass Sash far cheaper in the long run than your single layer sash with heavy, dark covers of mats or boards. You can save more than half the labor and worry and you can control your beds better and get earlier, stronger and far more profitable plants.

The Sunlight Double Glass Sash method comes right home to every gardener and florist in the country It is good business to learn all about it.

Write us today. We will send our complete catalog, free. If you enclose 4c in stamps we will also send Prof. Massey's booklet on hot-beds and cold-frames. Be sure to write your name and post office plainly.

The Market.

Perhaps the most remarkable thing about the 1911 Christmas was the fact that there was nothing remarkable about it. The volume of business was a small percentage better than for the same dates of last year, with prices about the same. The weather was not as warm as Christmas on some previous years, but the thermometer did not go below 20 degrees. Deliveries were handicapped slightly, but not seriously, by snow and rain which came early in the week and remained for Christmas.

Christmas plants were excellent in quality and found the usual ready sale. The honors were divided about evenly between azaleas, Lorraines, poinsettias and cyclamens, with plant baskets and ferns coming second.

Shipped cut flowers arrived in good condition, and for once were sufficient in quantity. The demand seemed a shade heavier than usual, but the retailers came a little nearer getting their orders filled and were better prepared to handle the later shoppers. The prices were about the same as for previous years, Beauties ranging from $6 to $15, roses around $3, with fancy Killarney and Richmond at $4 and $5. Good pink and white carnations brought $1.50; reds, $2. Violets just about equaled the demand, and sold for $1.50 and $2 per hundred. Some bulbous stock was offered, around 75 cents per dozen.

The consignments of holly came about when ordered and, as usual, one or two cases proved a disappointment. All that was salable was sold early; this was true also of holly wreaths. Mistletoe was slightly better than usual, and was just about equal to the demand. Only two florists handled Christmas trees and these report nice clean-ups. There is enough green rope left to do some decorating. The gradually increasing price and the gradually decreasing thickness of this once popular article seems to discourage the merchant who used to hang several hundred yards. He now leaves such stuff alone or invests in some gaudy green paper creation that can be dusted off and folded away for future reference.

Since Christmas the usual quietness has appeared, though business is better than for the same dates last year, due mostly to the demand from out of town. The weather and the rather stiff prices have not encouraged local transient trade.

Various Notes.

The florists were thankful that the week before Christmas was marked by a decided lull in funeral work. This was broken rather suddenly for the firm of Chas. P. Mueller on Christmas afternoon, when everyone was ready to go home and rest, by a nice order for out-of-town funeral work that kept them busy until evening.

Bixby & Co. report a highly satisfactory Christmas business in plants, with quite a little flurry, also, in cut flower baskets.

F. Kuechenmeister has given up gas as greenhouse fuel and gone back to the old reliable coal.

The Blake vegetable growing establishment has installed a new oil burner for heating. R. C.

A Few Cents' Worth of Gas or Gasoline

each day will give you plenty of water at high pressure every day in the year, and you won't need to use an overhead or storage tank either. After years spent in studying the florists' and gardeners' water supply question, we developed a line of pumps and engines that are adaptable to almost any conditions. We have combined the two in one unit and make them in sizes that give a capacity of from 400 to 4000 gallons per hour.

Standard Pumping Engines

may be used to pump directly into the pipe line and will give a steady, even stream suitable for spraying, irrigating or applying liquid fertilizers. They can also be used with any other kind of elevated tank or air pressure systems when preferred. Tell us the conditions to be met in your case and we'll tell you the best system to overcome your difficulties. Write fully about all possible sources of supply and the work to be done. We will freely give our expert advice to exactly fit your case, and in addition will send you our catalogue telling lots more about Standard Pumping Engines. A JOURNAL for FLORISTS, SEEDSMEN and NURSERYMEN

'Twas a Mighty Fine Show

That Rose and Carnation Convention at Detroit, but you missed one of the best and most instructive sights Detroit can offer if you failed to take a run out to Redford and see Albert Stahelin's range of movable houses. The most wonderful thing about this range is the remarkable strength and rigidity of construction that made it possible to move four houses, each 35x173 feet, a distance of nearly 200 feet without breaking a single light of glass. In order to obtain such perfect construction, it was natural that Mr. Stahelin should investigate every known type of greenhouse. His final decision was made after careful study and mature deliberation, and it is interesting to note that he chose the Garland Steel Truss Construction with Garland Cast Iron Gutters.

That his confidence in Garland materials and workmanship was amply justified was proven last fall when the houses were moved into position, and it has been proven ever since by the superb stock that is being grown in them. You may not want movable houses, but you do want houses that are strong, rigid, light and lasting and that is why you should be mightily interested in this test of Garland Greenhouses. Let us make sketches and estimates on that house or range you expect to build this year. We have doubled our factory capacity and are in shape to give first-class attention to every order.

Bear this in mind—If our estimate appears a little high at first glance, remember the superior construction you are getting and you'll agree it's worth every cent it costs—and then some.

JOINT MEETING A SUCCESS.

General Approval Given.

For the first time in the history of the Carnation and Rose Societies it has been possible to hold a joint midwinter exhibition and convention and, except for the upsetting of arrangements by the cold weather, the unqualified success achieved has met with almost unanimous approval. The rose men, when the January date was chosen, felt that they were taking a serious chance of not having the stock for a really creditable showing by comparison with what the Carnation Society has been accustomed to do, but, possibly because of their doubts and the extra effort which resulted, their fears proved groundless, for the Rose Society never has made so fine a showing as it is doing at Detroit this week. The number of rose exhibits is much greater than anything in the recent history of the society and for quality of stock certainly nothing better could be asked. Of course the novelties come in for a large share of the attention, but the classes for standard varieties are well filled and the general quality of the stock is a demonstration of the splendid progress the art of rose growing has made in the last few years. The rose men are not yet ready to admit that January 10 is an ideal date for their purpose, but they smile with satisfaction when they consider that they have done better than ever before on a date not of their choosing. They express the opinion, which seems a fair view, that the joint meeting is a fine thing, and should be continued, but that a later date should be tried next time.

So good a showing has the Rose Society made that the Carnation Society was put upon its mettle to hold up its end and maintain the position it has gained through twenty years of successful midwinter shows. The powers-that-be in the Carnation Society have insisted that January is the only satisfactory date for an exhibition of the flower for which the society stands sponsor. Of course the show in progress at Detroit this week does not prove that some other date would not be just as good, for there have been other carnation meetings with more entries, but it certainly does demonstrate that no other month would bring out finer carnations. It is one of the little ironies of fate that some of those who would not consider a later month for this year's joint exhibition were the principal losers through frozen stock.

Weather Delays Opening.

The only unfavorable factor was the severely cold weather. It upset all arrangements. All trains were from three to eight hours late on Wednesday, January 10, the opening day, and hardly any of the stock was out of the boxes at the hour the exhibition had been scheduled to open. In the middle of the morning, when the completely disorganized condition of the railroad service became apparent, a hurried meeting of the managers was held and it was decided that, inasmuch as nearly everyone was late, it would be necessary to cancel the arrangement that called for judging the show at one o'clock. Instead, the carnation judges, late in the afternoon, passed privately on the exhibits which were in place, but affixed no awards, waiting to see what the later trains would add to the show. This was a departure from established methods, but was with the approval of the earliest exhibitors, who would themselves have been shut out by a strict adherence to the rules. The rose men put their judging through.

A Splendid Hall.

The Detroit Florists' Club was warmly congratulated on the arrangements for the show. Wayne Pavilion affords ample floor space, with excellent meeting room on the same floor and hotel accommodations accessible without going outdoors. The exhibition hall has glass roof and walls, affording the finest of light and ventilation. The only criticism is that it is a little off from the center of the city, which was only of importance as affecting the attendance of the public. So excellent an exhibition could not fail to attract a large attendance of flower lovers, but doubtless the crowds would have been even larger had the location been more central, though the hall is the one in which the automobile and all other big shows are held in Detroit.

Manager Wm. Dilger assigned the roses to one side of the big room, the carnations to the other, and down the center erected a white bark pergola covered with wild smilax. The sides of the hall were covered by trellises decorated with the same green, festooning the business banners of some twenty-five firms. The floor, used for dancing, was covered with canvas.

The Formal Opening.

The joint convention was formally opened as per schedule, at 8 p. m., Wednesday evening, January 10, in the solarium of the Wayne hotel, with a flow of oratory commensurate with the importance and unprecedented character of the occasion. George E. Browne, president of the Detroit Florists' Club, was master of ceremonies and had on the platform with him Mayor Wm. B. Thompson, F. H. Conant, representing the Board of Commerce; Ex-Mayor Breitmeyer, J. A. Valentine, president of the Carnation Society; Hugo Schroeter, secretary of the Detroit club, and Benj. Hammond, secretary of the Rose Society, President Farenwald modestly choosing a seat in the front row of the audience. There were addresses of welcome by President Browne, Mayor Thompson, Mr. Conant and Prof. Griffith, of the Art Museum, with appropriate responses by Mr. Breitmeyer, speaking as vice-president of both the Rose and Carnation Societies; President Farenwald, of the Rose Society; President Valentine, of the Carnation Society, and Benj. Hammond, who was introduced as speaking for himself. In addition, Mrs. McGraw spoke for the Detroit branch of the National Plant, Flower and Fruit Guild, to which the exhibits are to be turned over at the close of the exhibition for free distribution among the sick and the poor of Detroit. There was a large attendance and the speechmaking was greatly enjoyed, perhaps all the more so because not one of the speakers made anything more than extemporaneous and brief remarks.

THE CARNATION SHOW.

While the quality of the carnations certainly was up to top notch, the number of flowers exhibited was less than at Pittsburgh two years ago, and possibly less than at several other previous meetings of the society. For the falling off the carnation men blamed the weather and the date, but mostly the date. They pointed out the date was not of their choosing, but merely accepted by them as the lesser of two evils; they maintained that the falling off in exhibits was further evidence that the third week in January is the one and only date for a national carnation show.

It was noted that there were more entries of Gloriosa than of any other one variety, exceeding the number of any white and far exceeding the number of entries of Enchantress. White Perfection led the whites in number of entries, but White Wonder was a close second.

Rather more than the usual number of new varieties were shown. Included were: Salmon Queen, salmon, from Traendly & Schenck; Benora, variegated, and Gorgeous, dark pink, from Peter Fisher; Brooklyn, dark pink, from Chas. Weber, and associates; Wodenethe, large white, from C. H. Totty; Wm. Eccles, scarlet, from Scott Bros.; The Herald, scarlet, from Chicago Carnation Co.; Sultana, crimson, and Rainbow, mottled, from the Wanoka Greenhouses; Delhi, scarlet, from Murphy & Skidelsky; Rosette, dark pink, from F. Dorner & Sons Co.; J. A. Valentine, flesh pink, from R. Witterstaetter; Northport, dark pink, from James Cockcroft, and a white and a mottled or overlaid one from W. N. Rudd. St. Nicholas, scarlet, from Baur & Steinkamp, arrived frozen and was not on view until a second shipment arrived.

THE ROSE SHOW.

The exhibition of the American Rose Society was notable, perhaps, first of all for the quantity of stock staged on a January date. The rose men had expressed a fear that they could not make a first-class show at this time of year and had accepted the date only because other interests were immovable. In quantity this rose show was much the largest yet held in this country. In the second place, the show was notable for the uniform high quality of the stock. There were so many entries in most of the classes that there were not half enough prizes to go around, but the awards were well distributed—well distributed as between the various exhibitors and also well distributed as between the east and the west. It was no disgrace that several excellent growers had the misfortune not to take any prizes at all. In the third place, the show was notable for the predominance of the Killarney family. Only one vase of Bridesmaid was shown, and not one of Bride. But there were Killarneys galore—all colors. Pink, dark pink, double pink, red, white, double white and no one knows how many others! The show demonstrated how thoroughly Killarney now dominates the market.

At 5 p. m. the last of the delayed trains was in, except one bringing A. N. Pierson's Double White Killarney and Killarney Queen, and it was agreed that the judging of the regular classes should proceed, the novelty class being left open until the next day.

The judges on roses were Emil Buettner, Park Ridge, Ill.; Leo Niessen, Philadelphia, and Eber Holmes, Montrose, Mass. Their awards were as follows:

Display of cut roses covering not less than 200 square feet—A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn., first; A. Farenwald, Roslyn, Pa., second; Breitmeyer Floral Co., Mt. Clemens, Mich., third. The Pierson exhibit included ten varieties and nearly 1,400 blooms.

MISCELLANEOUS EXHIBITS.

There were a number of miscellaneous exhibits provided for by the Detroit Florists' Club independently of the Rose and Carnation Societies.

J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati, staged a large round table of his Glory of Cincinnati begonia, plants in small pots but carrying a profusion of large flowers. This begonia steadily is adding to the number of its friends.

Breitmeyer Floral Co. and H. Pautke exhibited fine vases of Helen Newberry, late white pompon chrysanthemum.

J. E. Matthewson, Sheboygan, Wis., staged his patented carnation support in several forms.

The American Blower Co., Detroit, showed the Detroit trap for returning to the boilers the water of condensation. The exhibit was in charge of John Morehead, the inventor of the trap.

Hubert V. Pearce, Detroit, staged the Pearce return steam trap and boiler feeder. This is a new trap, exhibited for the first time, and just coming on the market in connection with the Pearce system of greenhouse heating. It is the result of Mr. Pearce's experience as a grower and he had a constant and always interested audience to listen to his explanations and witness his demonstrations.

C. C. Pollworth Co., Milwaukee, Wis., showed the Common Sense carnation support.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

Thursday's Session.

The carnation society put through its routine business in record time Thursday morning. The session opened with the reading of the annual address of President Valentine, which was referred to a committee consisting of Peter Fisher, Richard Witterstaetter and Eugene Dailledouze. The reports of Secretary Baur and Treasurer Dorner were received and ordered audited. The nomenclature committee reported on the year's registration, which now is in coöperation with the English carnation society.

The secretary reported on the Dorner memorial fund, which has reached $450 by popular subscription, and the officers were authorized to accept special subscriptions to bring the fund to $1,000, the interest to be used for an annual memorial medal.

The by-laws were amended to permit the reinstatement of delinquent members on payment of $5.

Officers were nominated as follows:

President—Philip Breitmeyer, Detroit.

Secretary—A. F. J. Baur, Indianapolis.

Treasurer—F. E. Dorner, La Fayette.

ing the business banners of some twenty-five firms. The floor, used for dancing, was covered with canvas.

The Formal Opening.

The joint convention was formally opened as per schedule, at 8 p. m., Wednesday evening, January 10, in the solarium of the Wayne hotel, with a flow of oratory commensurate with the importance and unprecedented character of the occasion. George E. Browne, president of the Detroit Florists' Club, was master of ceremonies and had on the platform with him Mayor Wm. B. Thompson, F. H. Conant, representing the Board of Commerce; Ex-Mayor Breitmeyer, J. A. Valentine, president of the Carnation Society; Hugo Schroeter, secretary of the Detroit club, and Benj. Hammond, secretary of the Rose Society, President Farenwald modestly choosing a seat in the front row of the audience. There were addresses of welcome by President Browne, Mayor Thompson, Mr. Conant and Prof. Griffith, of the Art Museum, with appropriate responses by Mr. Breitmeyer, speaking as vice-president of both the Rose and Carnation Societies; President Farenwald, of the Rose Society; President Valentine, of the Carnation Society, and Benj. Hammond, who was introduced as speaking for himself. In addition, Mrs. McGraw spoke for the Detroit branch of the National Plant, Flower and Fruit Guild, to which the exhibits are to be turned over at the close of the exhibition for free distribution among the sick and the poor of Detroit. There was a large attendance and the speechmaking was greatly enjoyed, perhaps all the more so because not one of the speakers made anything more than extemporaneous and brief remarks.

THE CARNATION SHOW.

While the quality of the carnations certainly was up to top notch, the number of flowers exhibited was less than at Pittsburgh two years ago, and possibly less than at several other previous meetings of the society. For the falling off the carnation men blamed the weather and the date, but mostly the date. They pointed out the date was not of their choosing, but merely accepted by them as the lesser of two evils; they maintained that the falling off in exhibits was further evidence that the third week in January is the one and only date for a national carnation show.

It was noted that there were more entries of Gloriosa than of any other one variety, exceeding the number of any white and far exceeding the number of entries of Enchantress. White Perfection led the whites in number of entries, but White Wonder was a close second.

Rather more than the usual number of new varieties were shown. Included were: Salmon Queen, salmon, from Traendly & Schenck; Benora, variegated, and Gorgeous, dark pink, from Peter Fisher; Brooklyn, dark pink, from Chas. Weber, and associates; Wodenethe, large white, from C. H. Totty; Wm. Eccles, scarlet, from Scott Bros.; The Herald, scarlet, from Chicago Carnation Co.; Sultana, crimson, and Rainbow, mottled, from the Wanoka Greenhouses; Delhi, scarlet, from Murphy & Skidelsky; Rosette, dark pink, from F. Dorner & Sons Co.; J. A. Valentine, flesh pink, from R. Witterstaetter; Northport, dark pink, from James Cockcroft, and a white and a mottled or overlaid one from W. N. Rudd. St. Nicholas, scarlet, from Baur & Steinkamp, arrived frozen and was not on view until a second shipment arrived.

The judges on carnations were: W. R. Nicholson, C. W. Johnson, R. Witterstaetter, E. A. Stroud, N. A. Benson and Eugene Dailledouze. Their awards were as follows:

THE ROSE SHOW.

The exhibition of the American Rose Society was notable, perhaps, first of all for the quantity of stock staged on a January date. The rose men had expressed a fear that they could not make a first-class show at this time of year and had accepted the date only because other interests were immovable. In quantity this rose show was much the largest yet held in this country. In the second place, the show was notable for the uniform high quality of the stock. There were so many entries in most of the classes that there were not half enough prizes to go around, but the awards were well distributed—well distributed as between the various exhibitors and also well distributed as between the east and the west. It was no disgrace that several excellent growers had the misfortune not to take any prizes at all. In the third place, the show was notable for the predominance of the Killarney family. Only one vase of Bridesmaid was shown, and not one of Bride. But there were Killarneys galore—all colors. Pink, dark pink, double pink, red, white, double white and no one knows how many others! The show demonstrated how thoroughly Killarney now dominates the market.

At 5 p. m. the last of the delayed trains was in, except one bringing A. N. Pierson's Double White Killarney and Killarney Queen, and it was agreed that the judging of the regular classes should proceed, the novelty class being left open until the next day.

The judges on roses were Emil Buettner, Park Ridge, Ill.; Leo Niessen, Philadelphia, and Eber Holmes, Montrose, Mass. Their awards were as follows:

Display of cut roses covering not less than 200 square feet—A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn., first; A. Farenwald, Roslyn, Pa., second; Breitmeyer Floral Co., Mt. Clemens, Mich., third. The Pierson exhibit included ten varieties and nearly 1,400 blooms.

The delayed shipments of Double White Killarney and Killarney Queen from A. N. Pierson, Inc., and stock from Gude Bros. Co. having arrived, the judges on roses completed their work Thursday morning with the following awards:

MISCELLANEOUS EXHIBITS.

There were a number of miscellaneous exhibits provided for by the Detroit Florists' Club independently of the Rose and Carnation Societies.

J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati, staged a large round table of his Glory of Cincinnati begonia, plants in small pots but carrying a profusion of large flowers. This begonia steadily is adding to the number of its friends.

Breitmeyer Floral Co. and H. Pautke exhibited fine vases of Helen Newberry, late white pompon chrysanthemum.

J. E. Matthewson, Sheboygan, Wis., staged his patented carnation support in several forms.

The American Blower Co., Detroit, showed the Detroit trap for returning to the boilers the water of condensation. The exhibit was in charge of John Morehead, the inventor of the trap.

Hubert V. Pearce, Detroit, staged the Pearce return steam trap and boiler feeder. This is a new trap, exhibited for the first time, and just coming on the market in connection with the Pearce system of greenhouse heating. It is the result of Mr. Pearce's experience as a grower and he had a constant and always interested audience to listen to his explanations and witness his demonstrations.

C. C. Pollworth Co., Milwaukee, Wis., showed the Common Sense carnation support.

John Lewis Childs, Flowerfield, N. Y., showed the new yellow calla, Elliottiana.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

Thursday's Session.

The carnation society put through its routine business in record time Thursday morning. The session opened with the reading of the annual address of President Valentine, which was referred to a committee consisting of Peter Fisher, Richard Witterstaetter and Eugene Dailledouze. The reports of Secretary Baur and Treasurer Dorner were received and ordered audited. The nomenclature committee reported on the year's registration, which now is in cooperation with the English carnation society.

The secretary reported on the Dorner memorial fund, which has reached $450 by popular subscription, and the officers were authorized to accept special subscriptions to bring the fund to $1,000, the interest to be used for an annual memorial medal.

The by-laws were amended to permit the reinstatement of delinquent members on payment of $5.

Officers were nominated as follows:

President—Philip Breitmeyer, Detroit.

Secretary—A. F. J. Baur, Indianapolis.

Treasurer F. E. Dorner, La Fayette.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

Thursday's Session.

The business session of the Rose Society was held at Wayne Gardens, Detroit, Thursday afternoon and evening, opening with the reading of President Farenwald's address. The reports of Secretary Hammond and Treasurer May were presented.

C. H. Totty, chairman of the National Flower Show committee, invited the society to meet at New York in April, 1913, combining with the National Flower Show. On motion of W. R. Pierson, the executive committee was authorized to accept the invitation, provided the terms offered by the National Flower Show committee are satisfactory. An immediate conference resulted in an agreement between the respective committees. The National Flower Show committee agrees to offer $2,000 for roses.

Officers were elected as follows:

President, A. Farenwald, Roslyn, Pa.

Vice-president, Frank H. Traendly, New York city.

Secretary, Benj. Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y.

Treasurer, Harry O. May, Summit, N. J.

Executive committee, F. R. Pierson, to succeed Peter Bisset; Robert Simpson, to succeed W. F. Kasting.

On motion of W. G. McKendrick, an amateur member, the executive committee was instructed to publish a quarterly bulletin for amateurs during 1912. Mr. McKendrick, W. H. Elliott, A. N. Pierson, John M. Good and Conard & Jones Co. each guaranteed $100 toward the cost of the bulletin.

A paper, "Roses in the Middle West," by Irwin Bertermann, was read by the secretary.

At an evening session a stereopticon lecture was given by Robert Pyle on "A Rosarian's Notes of Roses Made During a European Trip."

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

A meeting of the board of directors of the S. A. F. was held at Detroit, January 11, President Vincent occupying the chair and Secretary Young taking over the records from his predecessor, Mr. Dorner.

The status of the National Flower Show committee was defined and its work confirmed. The directors passed upon plans for the Chicago convention next August, including the leasing of the Coliseum for the trade exhibition. Many routine matters were disposed of. There was an almost full attendance of the board.

Pittsfield, Me.—A. J. Loder, who has a prosperous business here, with a branch store at Bangor, is installing a new boiler at his greenhouses on Lancy street. He is also completing arrangements for the erection of another greenhouse in the early spring.

LOCAL HOSPITALITY.

Thursday afternoon A. J. Stahelin provided a special car for a party to inspect his movable greenhouses at Redfield.

Thursday evening the Detroit Florists' Club gave a smoker at the Hotel Cadillac.

LADIES' ENTERTAINMENT.

F., took charge of the entertainment of the ladies who attended this week's convention at Detroit. She called to her assistance Mrs. E. A. Fetters, Mrs. Wm. Dilger, Mrs. E. A. Scribner, Mrs. M. A. C. S. SECRETARY'S REPORT.

[The following is the report of Secretary A. F. J. Baur, read before the American Carnation Society, in convention at Detroit, January 10, 11 and 12, 1912.]

Your secretary would respectfully submit the following report on the past year's work. The last convention having been held late in March, this report in some respects really covers not quite ten months.

The routine work connected with the office was gotten out in its regular order. Getting out the annual report, and collecting the dues, was attended to as is customary. We have made a special effort to collect the annual dues, but, in spite of our efforts, there are many who have not paid their dues for the current year. Out of a membership of 347, sixty-six have failed to pay their dues for 1911. Besides these, there are forty-four who are delinquent for 1909 and will be dropped from the roll. Six additional ones have sent in their resignations. Hence our membership, instead of increasing, has decreased during the past year. Forty-four new names were added during the year.

One of our members was called from our very midst during the year. John Birnie, of Hoboken, N. J., died of heart failure while attending the S. A. F. convention at Baltimore in August.

The society button is meeting with fair success. Over 100 members have supplied themselves with them. To make it a complete success, every member should have one and wear it wherever he goes.

An invitation was received from the National Conservation Association for this society to send five delegates to the congress which was held in Kansas City, August 25 to 28. The president appointed as delegates W. L. Rock and Samuel Murray, of Kansas City, J. F. Wilcox, of Council Bluffs, and Fred Meinhardt, of St. Louis. A report will be made by these gentlemen at this meeting.

In compliance with instructions given at the Boston meeting, the secretary addressed a letter to the members of this society, asking for contributions to the Frederick Dorner memorial fund. This letter was followed up with two additional ones, urging a general response. The funds which were thus collected were turned over to our treasurer, who put them on interest as they were turned over to him. A detailed report will be made at this meeting.

The joint meeting and exhibition of our society and the rose society, which are now in progress, were arranged for an experiment. Whether you wish to continue these joint exhibitions in the future, will be for you to decide. An admission fee is being charged at the door of the exhibition. This society shares in these receipts to the extent of twenty-five per cent of the gross receipts.

The premium schedule was gotten out at the usual period preceding the exhibition. Our friends have favored us with a generous lot of advertising, some twenty-three pages being taken. This will pay for the printing and leave a considerable balance for the treasury.

No meeting was held by the board of directors at Baltimore last August, as there were not enough present for a quorum. An informal meeting was held with some of the rose society members, in which the plans for the joint meeting were discussed, but no action could be taken on any of the questions discussed.

To the trade press is due our thanks for publishing gratuitously our registrations and other matters. To the men of Detroit credit is also due for the manner in which the exhibition is staged. To them we recommend a vote of thanks.

A. R. S. SECRETARY'S REPORT.

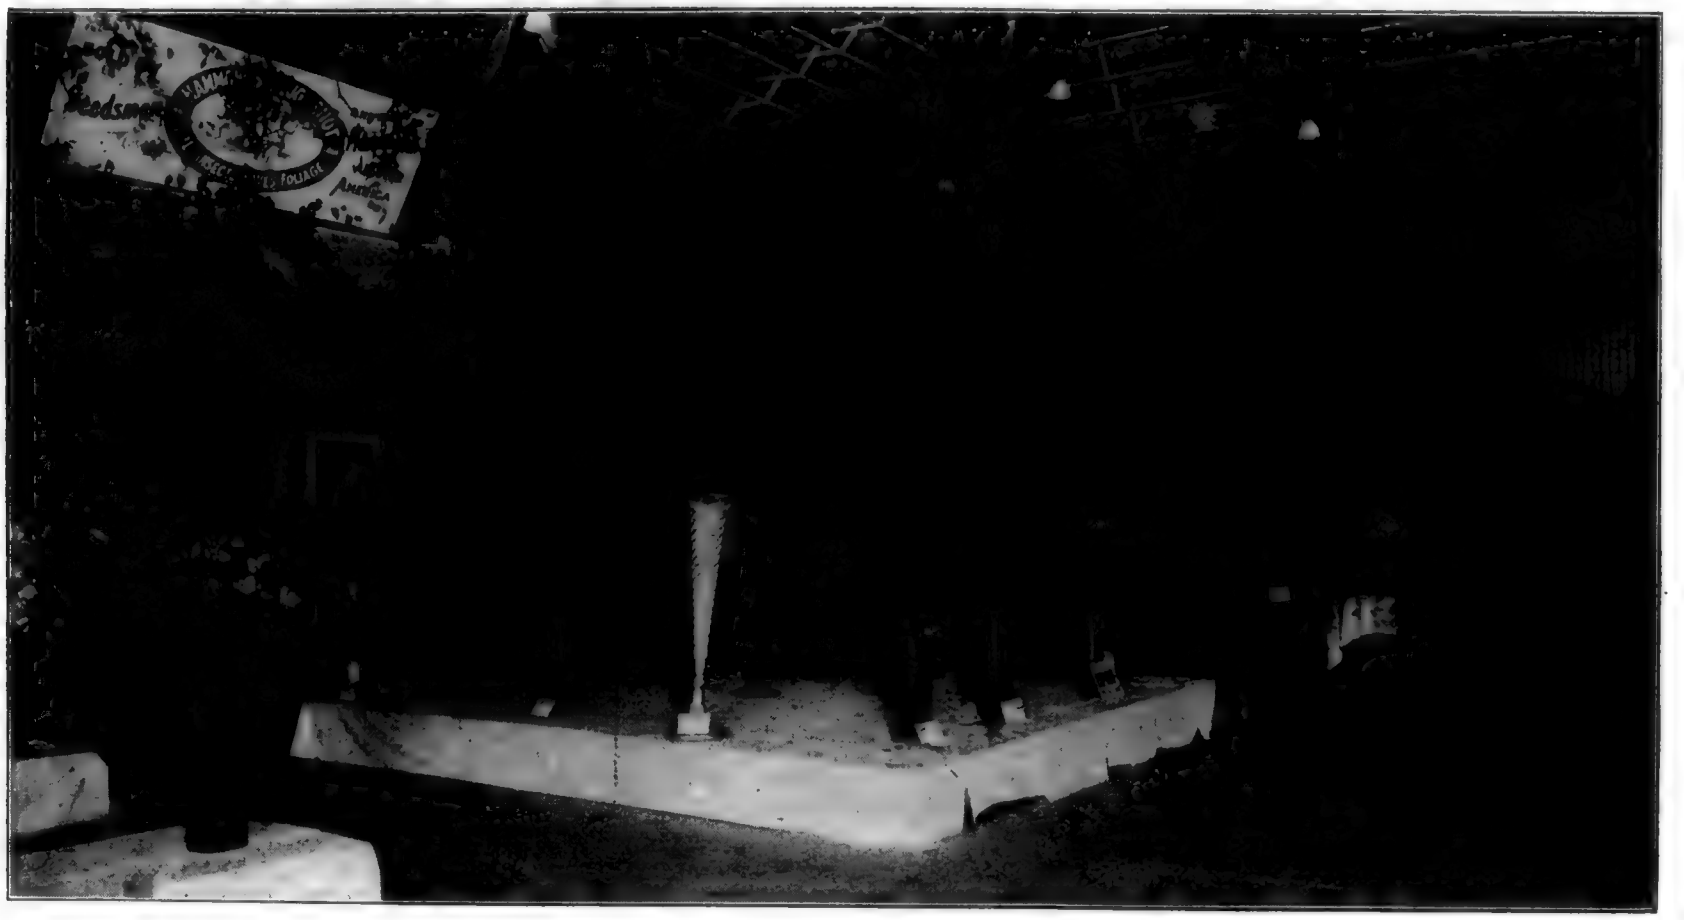
[The following is the report of Secretary Benjamin Hammond, read before the American Rose Society, in convention at Detroit, January 10 to 12, 1912.]

The American Rose Society brings to the eyes of the people of Detroit some of the choicest productions of the rose which can be grown under glass. Though this early season precludes the exhibition of pot plants, nevertheless the spirit of the brightest of flowers is here to stimulate the spirit of mankind, which admires beauty wherever it may be seen; and in this city of homes and enterprise, by the side of our greatest highway of the inland seas, as the national society of America we pay our respects, in the hope of encouraging extended interest in things choice, chaste and beautiful.

The American Rose Society has prospered during the past year. Addition has been made to its permanent fund and the members have paid dues; this means stability. But, to the mind of the secretary, there are two classes which should be in greater numbers among our membership—the growers of rose plants and the amateurs. The first should see the advantage and the second needs a little encouragement to feel in touch.

After five years' experience as secretary, I emphasize again the recommendation made by several members at the meeting held in Washington—the issuing of a special quarterly bulletin to amateur members. This would keep them in touch with us and they would feel that they were being looked after. This cannot be done without some expense. The suggestion was in a measure worked out, but when reported at the Chicago meeting it was thought better to do another way. This other way, however, did not materialize. So we have only one way to reach the multitude, and that is the annual bulletin, which seems to be appreciated. The able papers presented year by year are thus made matters of permanent record, and so far these papers have been of real interest to rose growers and admirers of the rose, and the commercial value of rose growing depends upon the admiration of the flower by the people,

At the Boston meeting a suggestion was made concerning a rule of measurement of stems as a means to regulate understandingly the value of various grades of roses in the market.



During the year the second gold medal was issued, and awarded to M. H. Walsh, of Woods Hole, in recognition of the eminent service rendered by him in the hybridizing of the Wichuraiana class of roses. Silver medals were sent to Robert Scott & Son, of Sharon Hill, Pa.; to S. J. Reuter & Son, Inc., Westerly, R. I., and to Waban Rose Conservatories, Natick, Mass. One silver and one bronze medal were sent to the Minnesota State Rose Society, one silver medal to the Annandale rose meeting, Annandale, N. Y., and two bronze medals for rose gardens made and tended by a school girl and boy at Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.

There is another matter which seems to me to be of prime importance for the American Rose Society to take up and act upon as a part of its permanent work. Is there anywhere a full list of the names and varieties of roses originated in America? Such a record should be made and, when a new rose is disseminated, if it were recognized by competent judgment on behalf of the American Rose Society and then recorded, this would be a safeguard against duplication and of much value to an originator.

Our society holds a permanent invested fund made by the late Mrs. Gertrude M. Hubbell, of Washington, D. C., to award each five years a valuable gold medal for the best rose of American origin. Mrs. Frances Roche, of Newport, R. I., has placed at the disposal of the society a prize of $50 for the best yellow rose, to resemble in color the Marechal Niel, but with stronger stem, to be competed for at any show selected by this society after June, 1912.

All members of the American Rose Society can feel that the idea, "A rose for every home, a bush for every garden," meets a response in the hearts of the people.

MR. VALENTINE'S ADDRESS.

[The following is the address of President J. A. Valentine, of the American Carnation Society, read at the convention of the society in Detroit, January 10 to 12, 1912.]

After a good many years of discussion, we are at last trying the experiment of holding an exhibition jointly with the American Rose Society, in connection with the annual meetings of both societies.

Whether this is a desirable change, which ought to be continued and become an established custom, will remain for this exhibition to demonstrate. There are sound arguments to be advanced on both sides of the question. To the man who comes a long distance and wishes to see the exhibitions of both societies, the saving of time and money would be quite considerable. This feature of it appealed to me so strongly that at our meeting in this same city of Detroit, eight years ago, I introduced a resolution seeking to bring it about.

The object of these exhibitions is probably threefold, but, if I am not mistaken, they could not be successfully carried on were it not for the new varieties of roses and of carnations. Joint exhibitions ought to induce a larger attendance of florists who are in the market for novelties than where the exhibitions are held separately. The interest of the general public ought to be more largely aroused by joint exhibitions, with a considerably larger attendance and larger gate receipts, if an admission fee is charged. The expense incurred for one exhibition ought to be less than for two.

A Weighty Question.

All of these arguments, however, would be outweighed if roses and carnations could not both be shown of good quality and in sufficient quantity at a joint exhibition. This is a difficulty which many growers have seemed to think insurmountable and the showing made at this present exhibition should go a long way toward determining that point.

At the same time, undue weight should not be given to the showing made by standard commercial varieties, because the novelties are the things which most florists come to these exhibitions to see.

I think I am well within the truth when I say that the tendency is to place orders for novelties earlier and earlier each succeeding year. Early exhibitions are, in this particular, an advantage to the disseminators of new varieties of either roses or carnations.

This question is a weighty one and is entitled to careful consideration. I hope that each member will take an active interest in its final settlement and that he will, as far as possible, put aside all personal prejudice and help settle it for the ultimate good of both societies.

During the years covered by the lifetime of this society, much has been accomplished by the exchanging of ideas concerning methods of cultivation and the best manner of fighting diseases and insect pests, and the discussion of other matters of mutual interest to carnation growers.

The improvement made in the carnation itself, both as to size and quality, has been quite marked.

The Society's Past and Future.

The American Carnation Society has been an exceptionally vigorous and virile organization, and its membership has averaged as widely awake and keenly alive to matters that affected it as has the membership of any other similar organization in this country. We have been fortunate in our membership and a number of our members have become known to carnation growers throughout the world, by reason of the excellent varieties which were originated and disseminated by them. We should, however, bear in mind that whenever a society becomes contented with its past achievements and relaxes its efforts, the situation becomes perilous.

If this society is to keep abreast of other bodies of like character, its members must not fail to note that the world's knowledge of the laws of heredity has been greatly increased within recent years and that other bodies of men are setting us a lively pace.

Until recent years there was no knowledge which could enable an experimenter to make his crossings in an intelligent, orderly manner. Crosses were made almost at random between promising varieties, a good deal as a man might shake dice in the hope that he would make a lucky throw. In fact, many crosses are still made in that way today. The commercial carnations of today are the offspring of numerous generations of cross-bred and inter-bred sorts, to such an extent that they are an extremely unstable lot, as evidenced by their almost universal tendency to produce sports. We would think a chemist was wasting labor if he tried to produce a useful compound when he knew only the colors, but not the chemical analysis of his ingredients.

Pure-bred Carnations.

I believe it is safe to say that there is not a pure-bred carnation in commerce today; and in order not to be misunderstood, I will say that by pure-bred I mean one that will uniformly reproduce itself from seed when self-fertilized.

With our present knowledge it is entirely possible to get such pure-bred sorts within a few generations. With these once produced and used as ancestors, the production of new varieties could be carried on with as notable results as have been attained by the men who have been working on similar lines with agricultural crops.

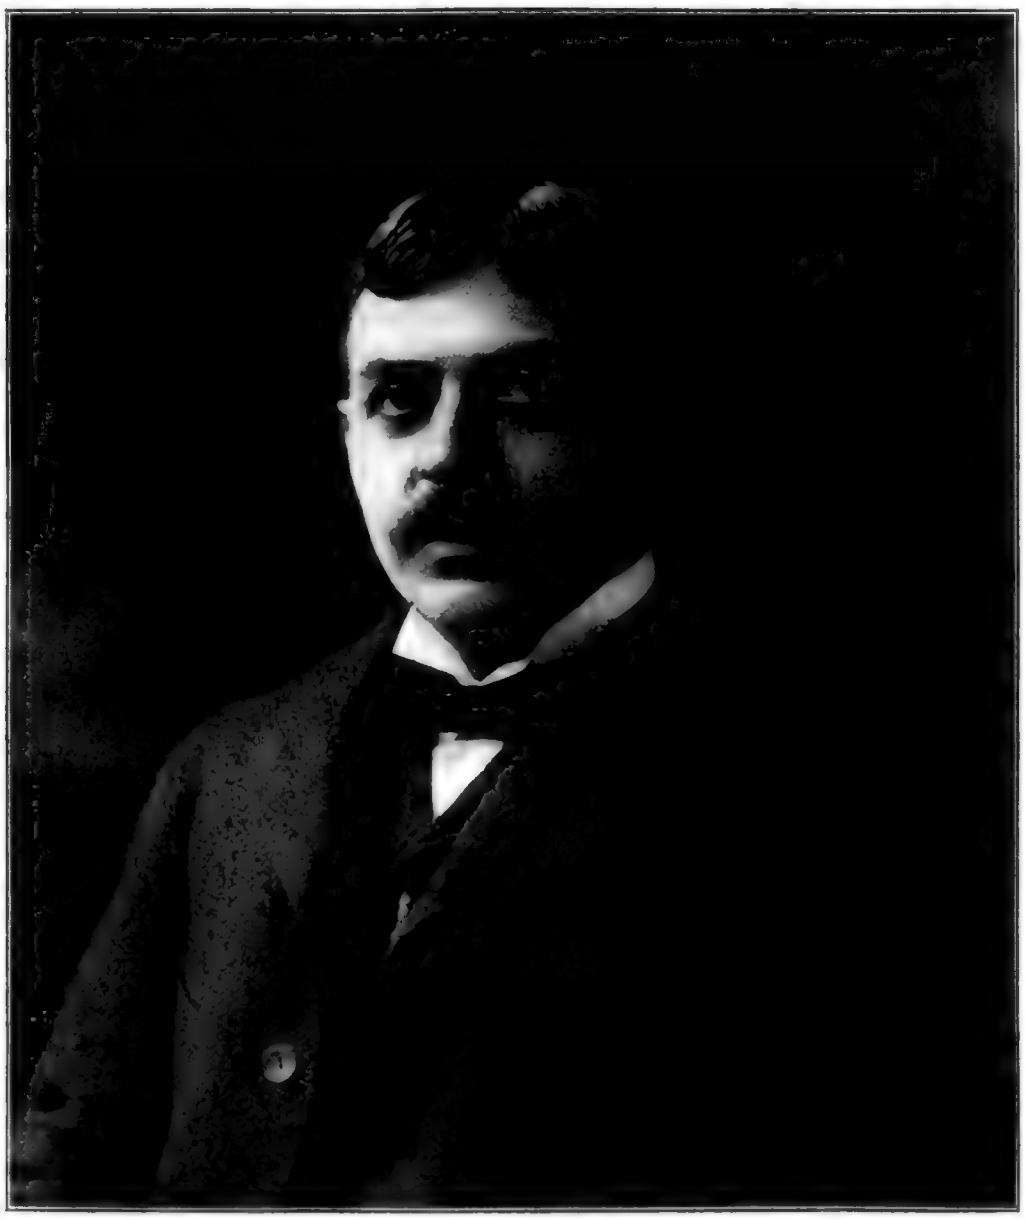
Nearly all of us have tried at some time to raise new carnations, and I think it will be pretty generally conceded that more is expended annually upon the production of seedling carnations than is received from the sale of cuttings.

I feel safe in predicting that within a few years we shall have carnations producing flowers of such quality and in such quantity as to prove profitable in a commercial way when grown from seed. It ought to be possible to produce strains that will be resistant to stem-rot and rust, to produce summer-blooming strains and strains that are suited to heavy soil or to light soil.

I consider this matter of pure-bred ancestors of such consequence that I would urge upon those who are commercially interested in the production of new varieties that they get together on this matter and divide the work among themselves, so that each will undertake to produce one or more such pure-bred sorts. By comparing results and by exchanging seed, rapid progress could then be made. It is entirely possible that by such work further knowledge of the laws of heredity could be obtained that would be a valuable contribution, not only to this society but to the world at large.

Up-to-date Propagation.

While we are about it, it might be well to see whether we are entirely up-to-date on methods of propagation. It used to take years before the raiser of rose seedlings could hazard a guess as to their value. The seedling inarch and nurse plant method of propagation have reduced this period to months instead of years. The grafting of seedlings upon established stocks by the ordinary method is also practiced, but with some danger of losing the seedling if the graft fails.



Most of you doubtless are familiar with the latest works on heredity, but to those who are not, and especially to the ambitious among the younger element, let me recommend that you procure and read that delightfully entertaining and instructive booklet, entitled "Mendelism," written by R. C. Punnett and published by Bowes & Bowes, of Cambridge, England. It is simple and elementary, and can be ordered through your bookseller at a probable cost of less than $1. I shall be surprised if those reading it for the first time do not find it as interesting and as fascinating as a love story and as full of thrills as one of Conan Doyle's detective tales. If some of you have sons growing up whom you wish to keep in the business and can interest them in some such line of reading, you will have made more likely the attainment of your desire.

Criticism Better Than Indifference.

I am fully aware that I am open to criticism as a theorist and not a practical grower, when I presume to present suggestions of this sort to a body of men, many of whom have made a financial success of raising and disseminating seedlings, while I have nothing to show in support of my position. I shall not regret your criticism if I provoke your discussion, for even antagonism is better than indifference.

While I was in Portland last summer, a friend and I were talking about the early settlers of Oregon, and he told me a story which may be apropos: A tourist asked an old settler where he had come from, and he said, "From east of the mountains." Being again asked from what part of the plains country he came, he replied that his old home had been west of the Mississippi. The tourist was still not satisfied and asked from what state, to which the old settler replied, "Well, I cum from Missouri. Now, durn you, laugh!"

Some of you may laugh at my enthusiasm regarding this matter of inheritance and the Mendelian theory, but do not fail to give it serious thought, even if it does provoke your mirth.

MR. FARENWALD'S ADDRESS.

[The following is the address of President Adolph Farenwald, of the American Rose Society, read at the convention of the society in Detroit, January 10 to 12, 1912.]

Fellow members of the American Rose Society, following the generous invitation of the Detroit Florists' Club to hold our annual convention at Detroit, the city which will in the near future wrestle with Chicago for the supremacy of the middle west, we meet again, after another strenuous year has rolled around, to look over the battlefield to see what has been gained or lost.

I hope the most of you have gained in knowledge and prosperity. Those who have gained knowledge in our profession should be generous in sharing it with some of their less favored fellow members, by freely distributing information when questions are asked on subjects with which they are familiar. This sharing of knowledge is the most important plank in our society's platform. Close that fountain, and the life of our society would be short. So I hope that every member will take an interest in our meetings and show that he is willing to help to uplift and uphold what is best in our society—and not alone in the meetings, but also out of them. He should be generous with his knowledge when some of our timid fellow members ask questions, for we do not all have the nerve to stand up in an open meeting to debate and question. So, fellow members, give freely where it is asked for. No man is so wise but that he needs advice sometime or other.

A Question of Progress.

I think our profession has kept abreast of the times in every way. The increase in glass put up must have been enormous, though I have no figures to give. It was greatly stimulated by the low prices of building material. Cultural methods and economies are continuously being improved upon. The grower of cut roses has not been falling behind, I am sure. Neither has the wholesaler or retailer, or else the output of cut roses could not have been handled so profitably for all. Only wide-awake men can go into it and survive.

While our business has prospered all over the country, I can not give quite such a rosy view of our society. We have gotten some new members, to be sure—some annual and some new life members. But what does that signify, when we take into consideration the thousands of men who are making a competency by growing roses, and the men who handle the product, either wholesale or retail? Every one of our members should be an apostle in his particular sphere of interest at home, to advance the cause of the American Rose Society. Our people, always so willing to uphold a good cause, seem to be singularly lacking in interest, and that where it affects the most vital parts of their business; namely, the upholding and advancement of the rose, either as cut flowers or plants. The English Rose Society last year increased its membership by several thousands. Are men and women in our profession here less keen in their appreciation of a strong rose society? It seems so. But why? Possibly because they think their places as growers or storekeepers are so small that they do not count. Surely they are badly mistaken. We need every one, large and small. Their successes and their failures will fit in where most needed, either to inspire the already successful ones to still greater achievements, or to put new life and energy into those men whom the gods have favored less.

As to Joint Conventions.

After many fruitless attempts to hold a joint convention of the American Carnation Society and our society, they have at last joined hands to hold their convention and exhibition together here in Detroit, in the same hall. Both societies had to change their plans somewhat. Whether this joint meeting will prove successful, I am at the present time not able to say. But I do hope for the best, as there were many points in favor of doing so. The officers of the Rose Society and its executive board were unanimous in this move. I know many members are dissatisfied with such an early date, but let us withhold our criticism until after the meeting. Without giving it a trial, we were not able to speak positively either for or against the Detroit meeting. I hope that this exhibition is all it should be—an educator to us and the public.

of the rose, either as cut flowers or plants. The English Rose Society last year increased its membership by several thousands. Without giving it a trial, we were not able to speak positively either for or against the Detroit meeting. I hope that this exhibition is all it should be—an educator to us and the public.

Also, we must all do our best to advance the growing of outdoor roses, in whichever way we can do it best, for that is where our amateur members will come from later. We must, above all, interest the nurseryman to grow the outdoor roses best suited to his locality and to make exhibits in the June shows. There are no better object lessons for the public than these.

Introduction of New Roses.

New roses are coming in abundance from everywhere. This is a splendid showing, which I am sure is largely due to the influence of the Rose Society's efforts and its exhibitions. We must continuously advance. Of course, that makes it so much harder for any new rose to qualify, but when a winner it will amply repay all losses to the hybridizer or to the distributor. We should encourage the hybridizer in his efforts. I would suggest here that the distributor test his new roses a little more carefully before sending them out, by giving some plants to other firms in different localities to be grown. This test may be a little more costly, but will be a great deal more profitable to both parties, the distributor and the grower who buys them. I also strongly advise florists' clubs everywhere to use their influence with their respective state legislatures to establish experiment stations at their state colleges to test plants and fertilizers, so that in both respects we would not be groping so much in the dark as we mostly do now.

In conclusion I would say that the strengthening and upbuilding of our society needs some sacrifice in time and money on the part of every loyal member. Every good cause has only advanced in such a way, and who will say that our aims are less deserving? So, fellow members, if any of you who are facing me came with a grouch on, forget it. Look around, reflect; there are others. Bear your sacrifices with a cheerful smile; it will make it easier to you and more pleasant to the rest. The cheerful giver is the most beloved. When you return home, go to your neighbor in our profession, smack your chest, and tell him you went to Detroit in zero weather, running chances of trouble at home, but thought it would be good for you and your business. Tell him you saw and heard a lot and gave something in return. Make him feel that he has missed something, and that he will not be behind another year. Then you will have fulfilled your mission to the American Rose Society. You are a loyal and a royal good fellow!

ROSES IN THE MIDDLE WEST.

[A paper by Irwin Bertermann, of Indianapolis, Ind., read before the American Rose Society, in convention at Detroit, January 10 to 12, 1912.]

The practical theory of the production of roses is so often ably taken care of that it may be well here to draw attention to the standard of "A rose for every home and a bush for every garden," also the relationship between those who are so nobly laboring with the production of nature's wares and those who are benefiting mankind and themselves in using roses in their dooryards and adorning the homes of the middle west.

From the time the wild brier of Indiana graced the log cabin of the settler until the limestone mansion became arched with Tausendschon, Dorothy Perkins and other ramblers, has the rose held the highest place in the hearts of the people, for, as Jim Riley says so fittingly:

"The world is full of roses and the roses full of dew,
The dew is full of heavenly bliss that drips for me and you."

His home in Lockerbie street is made more attractive by an old rose of the climbing variety, which has been there for years and which is watched over carefully.

Unfortunately, many of the better kinds of roses do not withstand our climate as they do on either coast or in the south, but when additional care and attention are given, the results are most gratifying. Those varieties which flourish are well known, and thousands of any new introduction which promises to withstand the climate are easily disposed of.

Two of the Society's Aims.

It is not my purpose to treat lightly a subject of such commercial importance, and the highest compliment which might be paid your organization is the recognition of the greatness and goodness made manifest through your work in the heightening and purifying of American citizenship. Articles No. 1 and 2 in "The Aim of the American Rose Society" are not the least important in the production of either commercial or new varieties.

Article 1 reads: "To increase the general interest in the cultivation and to improve the standard of excellence of the rose for all the people."

Article 2: "To foster, stimulate and increase the production in every possible way of improved varieties of the rose, suitable to our American climate and requirements."

New Roses Gladly Welcomed.

The people are always awaiting new roses and the space is wonderfully close between the distant public and him who daily watches over his houses of roses for their ultimate consumption. Mrs. Aaron Ward, Mrs. Taft, Lady Hillingdon and even Sunburst, through the press, have already won their way with the rose buyers. The good qualities of each are well known by regular patrons. Mrs. Ward keeps well; Mrs. Taft is an unusual pink, most successful for table decorating, and Lady Hillingdon, with its coppery shades, is most suitable for the corsage. A full sized cut of Sunburst in an Indianapolis paper this fall brought hundreds to see it and many still inquire at that store for the new rose seen in the picture.

Flower Shows as Educators.

Spring flower shows argue well for roses and those who produce them. None of us have forgotten the wonderful display of indoor and outdoor varieties at the national exhibition. The stimulus given the flower buyers in the vicinity of Boston was undoubtedly a lasting one. Chicago has undertaken an exhibition of this kind, as have several other cities, and the opportunity for educational work is great. The spring shows should do more for the rose than the autumn ones do for the chrysanthemum, as they come at a time when the flower buyers may view elegant displays of forced roses and in turn have the same varieties planted in their gardens.

Your able secretary, Mr. Hammond, in a recent letter stated: "While in Indianapolis I saw many beautiful homes and no slums." How could there be slums with Hill's, Dorner's, Vesey's, Coles' and many others in close proximity to the Hoosier capital, who are putting forth a tremendous lot of energy in producing all that is beautiful for a community where there is plenty of room and gardens are plentiful?

An Era of Small Roses.

An era of small roses is at hand. The large varieties fill a big place admirably, but let the rosarians become more interested in the smaller types, such as Bon Silene. There is much need for them in corsage work, in baskets and for debutante bouquets, where the small rose has a greater charm than the larger kinds. A forcing rose bearing its flowers in clusters, for winter use, would be a wonderful addition to look forward to.

When our section of the land has reached the advancement of rose growing noticeable in France, Germany and England, when the love of them in the gardens is as great, and when the rose may be seen growing in all vantage spots and given the same enlightened attention, we shall have accomplished a wonderful and lasting work. America is a big country, with varying conditions, but there is only a small portion that is not adaptable for some variety.

Encouragement of Outdoor Culture.

The large commercial firms, with their millions of feet of glass, having beautiful stores in the larger cities as an outlet, are a stage upon which the rose plays the leading role. Exquisite baskets arranged with airy laces, bridal bouquets in elegant array and artistic decorations all show the possibilities of the indoor flowers, and such work may be seen by anyone at any time, but beautiful arches, groups and conventional outdoor designs are not so common a feature, nor is it nearly as probable for a beautifully trained bush to find itself amid the thousands and in the slums of the larger cities. It devolves greatly upon the rose exhibitions, therefore, to show the public what may be done in gardening effects and in helping to beautify outdoor surroundings.

The advancement of the rose from season to season and year to year is not so discernible, but a retrospection of twenty years shows what has been accomplished and suggests vividly what earnest endeavor may do.

The scope of the American Rose Society is a broad and useful one, as it permits not only the production of roses, but goes further in endeavoring to teach, through exhibition and example, a love of them.

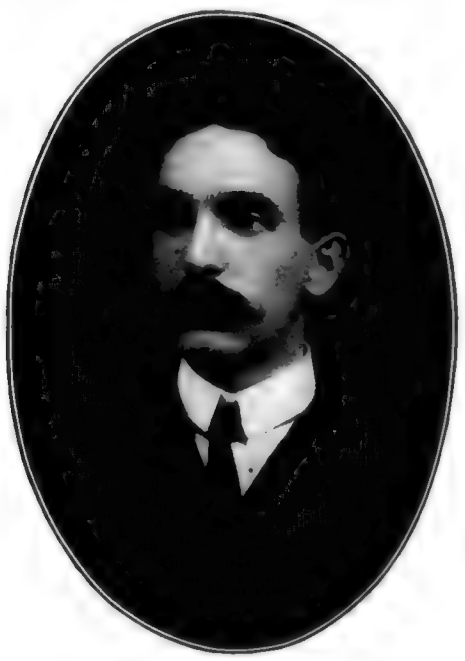
EVERYBODY'S FLOWER.



[A paper by Hugo Schroeter, of Detroit, Mich., read before the American Carnation Society, in convention at Detroit, January 10 to 12, 1912.]

When the Ridgway Co. sought a name for its magazine, I presume they called it "Everybody's" because this one word covered its scope most thoroughly. This was the question which confronted me when your secretary bestowed on me the honor of addressing your society. He suggested that my paper deal with "that divine flower, the carnation," but requested that I choose my own title. After banishing from my thoughts a number of more or less suitable titles, it occurred to me that in speaking of the carnation the most appropriate term would be "Everybody's Flower." In fact, of all the numerous flowers we have to deal with, the carnation is the only one which can be righteously called the flower for everybody.

Roses are conspicuous in most of the events where flowers are used, but, even in the smallest decoration, if a variety of flowers are called for the carnation is sure to play a most important part. Often, when offering suggestions for decorating the home for a small wedding, the question will arise, "What flowers can we use on the piano and the sideboard, or what bright red flower is there which we can use on the table, the flower not to be too costly?" In nearly every instance the carnation is called upon to fill the place. A customer may be somewhat disappointed in not being able to obtain violets, Beauties, sweet peas or any other of the flowers in general use, but carnations in a flower store are as staple as nails in a hardware store.

Always in Demand.

Last season, during a period when carnations were extremely scarce, a lady came into our store and wanted two dozen rose-pink carnations. She was politely informed that carnations were scarce and we had none in the shade desired. "Would not some other pink flower do?" "Yes," she replied, "I presume some other flower will have to do, but it seems so queer not to be able to obtain carnations." Retail florists advertise roses, chrysanthemums, orchids, etc., but only in case of a special sale are carnations advertised, simply because it seems to be understood that we always carry a stock of carnations except during the hot spell of July and August.

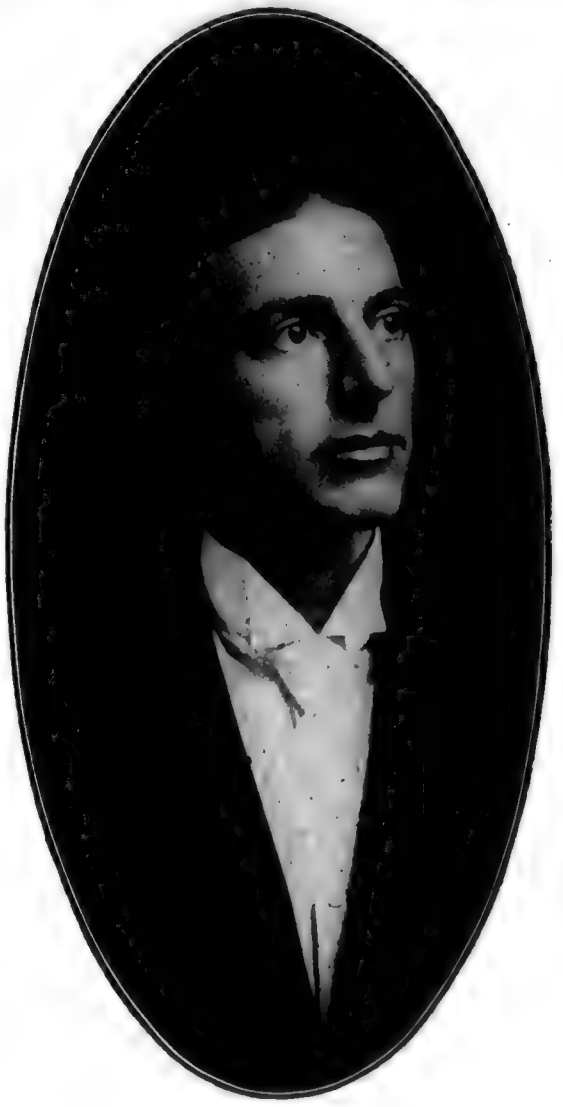
Now then, gentlemen, you will all agree with me that the carnation is everybody's flower, but, being manufacturers and not selling agents, as it were, perhaps you have often wondered why the carnation is in such demand. Is it the price alone that makes for the popularity of this flower? Hardly; this might be the case with the middle and poorer classes, but how about those people who do not have to count their pennies?

Reasons for Its Popularity.



No other flower adapts itself to all uses as does the carnation; no other is so easily arranged into an effective spray or bouquet, or in a bowl, to serve as a centerpiece. This, I believe, is the principal reason why, each year, the carnation sales amount to hundreds of thousands. The number used in the small, inexpensive funeral sprays every year is in itself a large amount. Their length and flexibility of stem, their keeping qualities and size make them most admirable for funeral spray work. For design work the carnation is almost a necessity. Here, again, its size is an important factor. White carnations, with the stem broken off and a toothpick in its stead, are the best flowers we have for outlining a design or as a background for lettering. With the stem left from three to five inches long, they are excellent for trimming a design, the stem being just stiff enough to carry the flower gracefully. It does not require the hand of an expert designer to make a loosely arranged wreath of all carnations; nevertheless, such a design is especially attractive and lasting.

For the sick-room the carnation seems to be just the ideal flower. One or two dozen, with a few sprays of Asparagus Sprengeri or a few fronds of a Boston fern, are just enough for a vase, and that spicy, ever pleasing odor is not an overpowering one, to which the doctor or nurse might object. Carnations are naturally a graceful appearing flower and, when given an especially artistic touch by some real expert, are unsurpassed for decorative purposes.

The Wealth of Colors.

I have enumerated only a few of the many uses for the flower which has done so much toward putting our business on a firm basis—or perhaps I should have said, which has taken flowers out of the luxury class and caused them to be classed with the necessities of life. There are still more substantial reasons for its ever-increasing popularity.

Take the colors, for instance. Not many flowers possess that beautiful shade of pink to be found in an Enchantress or Pink Delight or in their deeper sister, Winsor. In the poinsettias alone is to be found a red which surpasses the red of an O. P. Bassett carnation. Of course, there are beautiful reds in dahlias, sweet peas and roses, but not that scarlet shade of red usually known as Christmas red and so necessary for decorative purposes. Then, again, where is to be found the pure white of a carnation and in such abundance? In no other flower. And the delicate yellow tint of a carnation like Pingree places this flower in a class by itself as far as color is concerned. I am sorry to say, it is a rare case indeed when a yellow carnation is available in this market. Surely, if more were grown they would in time meet with a more regular demand, as yellow flowers are always scarce except during the chrysanthemum season. Another beautiful type of carnation, whose color is unexcelled, is Harlowarden. A magnolia wreath trimmed with Harlowarden and a few valley is a most beautiful conception.

A. F. J. Baur.
(Secretary American Carnation Society.)

The Variegated Sorts.

But what of the variegated varieties? These do not seem to meet with popular favor. We have some really good looking variegated kinds; still, it is not often that colors are mixed in floral work and this, no doubt, accounts for the small use for variegated flowers.

The price at which carnations are obtainable is usually, of course, also one reason why millions are sold. Even the wealthiest people often desire to spend but a few dollars for a funeral spray or for some other occasion, and carnations are always acceptable.

When I started to write this paper my intention was to endeavor to obtain figures giving the total number of carnations sold at retail in this country during the last year. After conferring with others, I discarded this plan, as it would have been almost impossible to arrive at anywhere near the correct amount. There are, nevertheless, millions sold annually at prices ranging from 25 cents per dozen to 25 cents per flower.

Is Its Popularity in Danger?

I have referred to the ever-increasing popularity of the carnation. Of course, there is no doubt that more are sold each year, this being only natural, as flowers are becoming more and more in vogue and the country is growing, but is the carnation as popular as it was some years ago? Do the beautiful carnation blooms of the present day elicit the same approval as did the far inferior ones of twelve or fifteen years ago? It is a noticeable fact that each year brings more people who, while they will not deny the beauty of the flower, still say, "Oh! Carnations are altogether too common."

In my opinion the carnation grower, or, to be more exact, the carnation itself is largely to blame for the existence of the street flower faker, for without this staple article his activity each year would be of but short duration, and in time he would be compelled to seek elsewhere for a livelihood. With him, also, "everybody's flower" plays a most important part.

The Street Fakers.

Just how the street flower merchant affects the sales of the legitimate retail store is a matter in which opinions differ. Of course, the retail store in closest proximity to these stands will be most affected as far as actual sales are concerned, but this is getting away from my subject. One thing is certain, the sale of thousands of carnations on the streets every year will in time seriously affect the popularity of this flower. In fact, it would elevate our profession considerably if flowers were kept off the streets and out of the peddlers' hands, and sold or disposed of through legitimate channels only.

Hugo Schroeter.

Eber Holmes.

(One of the Rose Society's Judges at Detroit.)

In the first place, those sold on the streets are always more or less old; consequently their keeping qualities are extremely limited. Again, the manner in which they are delivered to the buyer, wrapped in a piece of old newspaper, certainly does not tend to increase the flowers' popularity. Neither will the street merchant hesitate in misrepresenting his wares, all of which has so cheapened carnations in the eyes of the public that even if the legitimate florist could meet the faker's price the majority of people would not want them. This is particularly true when they can be purchased on the streets. Customers will look in disdain at the choicest carnation and remark, "No, thanks; no carnations for me. My friends might think I bought them on the street."

Disposing of the Surplus.

In this way, gentlemen, has the value of the carnation suffered, and the remedy lies in our hands. The argument has been advanced that many of the blooms sold on the streets find their way into the homes of people who are not in the habit of buying flowers, and their liking for nature's messengers is consequently stimulated. This is true to some extent; still, if these same people could be induced to come into a flower store and, perhaps for a few cents more, buy perfectly fresh carnations, properly done up, is it not reasonable to believe they would be still more apt to become flower lovers?

When there is a glut of carnations, why not sell them to the retailer who, for 365 days each year, is your customer, or your commission man's customer, at a low figure, say, from 50 cents to $1 per hundred, or at the same price the faker pays? You will say the latter buys thousands at one time; true enough, but only when he can buy at a loss to the grower. When you are selling at a profit it is the store man to whom you sell; in fact, you are dependent on the legitimate retail flower merchant for your profits. Then why not assist the latter in upholding the standard of the carnation? Make it possible for him to send to his customers occasionally two or three dozen carnations gratis, the grower to bear part of the expense, for you will surely share in the profits that result from such advertising.

Right here occurs to me a suggestion from Mr. Elberfield, of Kansas City. His idea is to advertise that with each one dozen sold another dozen will be sent free of charge to some friend of the buyer. By selling them at 50 cents per dozen at this time, you are really not cheapening the flower, but merely giving a few away. Mr. Elberfield's contention is that this will result in two sales eventually, as the party receiving the flowers will want to reciprocate. Any such schemes will tend to relieve a glut without injuring our business.

The Need of Coöperation.

My suggestions for partially relieving a glut may be rather vague fancies, in consideration of the fact that the surplus in this city (Detroit) is naught when compared with the hundreds of thousands of carnations, violets and roses for which the commission man in New York or Chicago must each season find an outlet. Still, the proportion of first-class stores in those cities is correspondingly greater and I am sure a concentrated effort by grower, commission man and retailer combined would at least help some.

The trouble is that there is too much animosity between the two factors. It would certainly be to the advantage of both if more harmony and more of an exchange of ideas existed. If only the producer of our wares were to enlist his services in a retail store for one season and there meet face to face the final consumer of the products of his thousands of square feet of glass, I am positive he would be well repaid for his trouble.

In my enthusiasm I have again edged away from my subject, but I trust you will pardon my negligence.

How About a Summer Carnation?

Speaking of exchanging views, why would not a summer carnation be a good thing to develop? We have roses which do especially well during the warm summer months; surely our carnation growers of today can in time produce some varieties which will be at their best in summer. Not that many kinds would be required; a good white and a good pink will do for a starter.

As previously stated, the odor of the carnation is one of its valuable features. Instead of giving so much thought and care toward the producing of larger, always larger blooms, I believe that the further development of that spicy, ever-pleasant odor, so pronounced in some white varieties, would not be amiss.

Rose Sunburst.

Another suggestion I might offer is the growing of White Enchantress for funeral work. If not disbudded they will prove most profitable to the grower, as they bloom freely and bring good sized flowers, which in turn will bring good prices from the retailer when white flowers are scarce.

My endeavor has been to make this paper interesting and instructive and I may have made remarks which some of my audience will resent. I can assure you that no harm was meant, but, as stated before, it is only by the utmost frankness that we can make the carnation still more true to the title of my paper.

Grading Flowers Honestly.

Right here I might bring to your attention the fact that when a customer pays a price for one dozen carnations, each and every flower in that dozen must be up to the standard; one poor flower in the lot will bring forth a great big kick. Many customers even go so far as to expect a baker's dozen. Why, then, do some growers still persist in slipping one or two culls in with every twenty-five blooms? I know it must hurt to have a number of blooms in every day's cut which will bring but little on the market; still, by bunching these separately they will bring some returns, and as soon as it becomes known that you grade your flowers honestly your stock will be always in demand. Your brand of carnations will sell before all others, because the buyer will get value received every time.

As a final suggestion, I would say: Do not resort to any more pickling of stock than is absolutely necessary. Nothing will so prejudice people against a certain kind of flower as the fact that it will not last long, and pickled carnations or any other pickled flower will positively not last. Rose, violet and chrysanthemum growers will also please note these last remarks.

Charles H. Totty's recent experience seems to give strong support to the statement that honors, like troubles, never come singly. Within the last three months three honors—and burdens—have been heaped upon him; he has been made chairman of the S. A. F. national show committee, president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America and a member of the S. A. F. executive board.

Mr. Totty was born in Shropshire, England, in 1873. At the age of 13, after obtaining a common school education, he began a three years' apprenticeship in the gardens of a Mr. Sheringham. Then he spent a year in the nurseries of Messrs. Dickson, of Chester, and a year at Norris Green, a noted fruit growing establishment near Liverpool. He came to America in 1893. After being employed for a year and a half on the estate of Mrs. Thompson, at Canandaigua, N. Y., he removed to Madison, N. J., and went to work on the estate of H. McKay Twombly, under the superintendency of Arthur Herrington. After eight years of valuable experience there, he embarked in business for himself by buying the James Hart greenhouses at Madison. These he enlarged and improved, and six years later he added by lease the Twombly place over which he had presided as foreman. For years he has been winning increasing fame as a chrysanthemum specialist, and he is particularly well known to readers of The Review as the writer of much valuable matter with reference to his favorite flower.

John A. Evans, of the Quaker City Machine Co., Richmond, Ind., is exceedingly modest and unpretentious as to the amount of information he has furnished for this sketch. If he were running for office, it would be difficult to construct a good campaign document from his meager and matter-of-fact statements. He and his company are already well known to the trade as the manufacturers of the Evans Challenge ventilating apparatus. Aside from that, he simply mentions that he was born in Allegheny, Pa., January 25, 1853, that he started in the business of making his ventilating apparatus in 1885, that he has been a member of the S. ANTIDOTE FOR RHUS POISON.

E. O. Orpet, of Lake Forest, Ill., speaking of ivy poisoning, says that "last summer, when Rhus toxicodendron was just budding forth with blood-red shoots, four men were employed to root it up, for unless given something to climb upon, it becomes a pestiferous ground weed. These men were seemingly immune until hot weather, but when perspiration was free all were badly affected. The face swells to such an extent that the sufferer can scarcely see, and other portions of the body are also affected.

"Our physician recommended as a remedy tincture of Sanguinaria Canadensis, sopped on with a soft cloth. Each man was cured in four days by the use of this simple remedy. The bloodroot grows plentifully here with the rhus in similar situations, and a pint of the tincture is ample to effect a cure of a serious case. Physicians also recommend the fluid extract of Grindelia robusta for cases of poison from Rhus toxicodendron and R. venenata, the latter being the worse of the two species."

Within the last three months three honors—and burdens—have been heaped upon him; he has been made chairman of the S. A. F. national show committee, president of the Chrysanthemum Society of America and a member of the S. A. F. executive board.

Mr. Totty was born in Shropshire, England, in 1873. At the age of 13, after obtaining a common school education, he began a three years' apprenticeship in the gardens of a Mr. Sheringham. Then he spent a year in the nurseries of Messrs. Dickson, of Chester, and a year at Norris Green, a noted fruit growing establishment near Liverpool. He came to America in 1893. After being employed for a year and a half on the estate of Mrs. Thompson, at Canandaigua, N. Y., he removed to Madison, N. J., and went to work on the estate of H. McKay Twombly, under the superintendency of Arthur Herrington. After eight years of valuable experience there, he embarked in business for himself by buying the James Hart greenhouses at Madison. These he enlarged and improved, and six years later he added by lease the Twombly place over which he had presided as foreman. For years he has been winning increasing fame as a chrysanthemum specialist, and he is particularly well known to readers of The Review as the writer of much valuable matter with reference to his favorite flower.

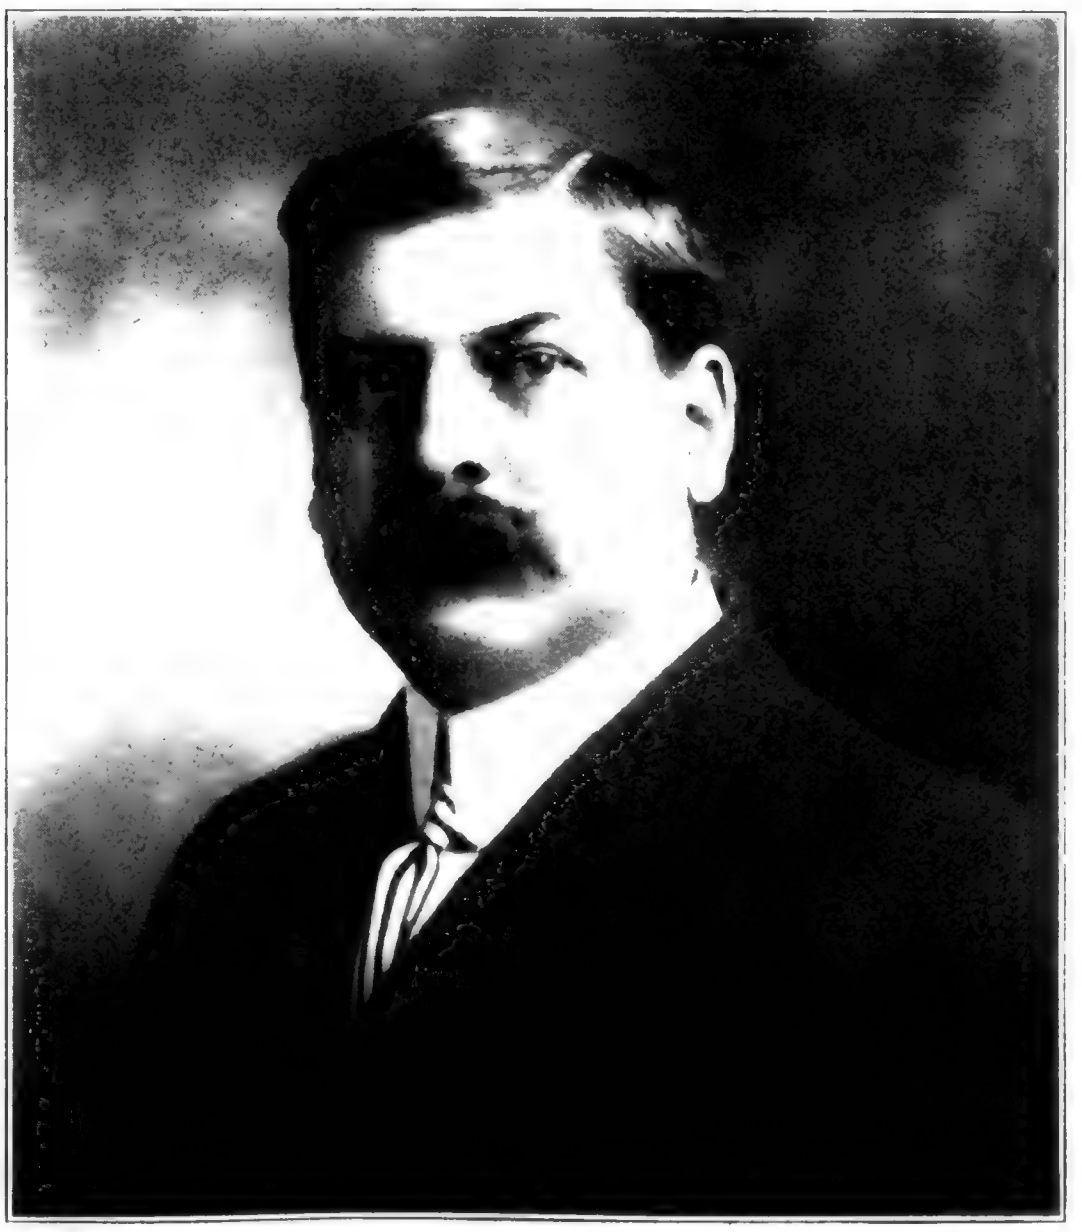
John A. Evans.



John A. Evans, of the Quaker City Machine Co., Richmond, Ind., is exceedingly modest and unpretentious as to the amount of information he has furnished for this sketch. If he were running for office, it would be difficult to construct a good campaign document from his meager and matter-of-fact statements. He and his company are already well known to the trade as the manufacturers of the Evans Challenge ventilating apparatus. Aside from that, he simply mentions that he was born in Allegheny, Pa., January 25, 1853, that he started in the business of making his ventilating apparatus in 1885, that he has been a member of the S. A. F. since the first meeting at Philadelphia, that he has attended every convention of the society except the first one, held at Cincinnati in 1885, and that he is now a life member of the S. A. F.

SALVIA SEEDS.

In The Review for January 4 C. W. advises the sowing of scarlet sage early in March. That date is too late for the temperature in which I grow the plants. I find February 10 late enough if grown in a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees. Several years ago I had to throw away most of my sage because it was not in bloom for Decoration day. I sowed it the first week in March that year. My plants do not get tall when grown in a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees. E. J. Hull.

ANTIDOTE FOR RHUS POISON.

E. O. Orpet, of Lake Forest, Ill., speaking of ivy poisoning, says that "last summer, when Rhus toxicodendron was just budding forth with blood-red shoots, four men were employed to root it up, for unless given something to climb upon, it becomes a pestiferous ground weed. These men were seemingly immune until hot weather, but when perspiration was free all were badly affected. The face swells to such an extent that the sufferer can scarcely see, and other portions of the body are also affected.

"Our physician recommended as a remedy tincture of Sanguinaria Canadensis, sopped on with a soft cloth. Each man was cured in four days by the use of this simple remedy. The bloodroot grows plentifully here with the rhus in similar situations, and a pint of the tincture is ample to effect a cure of a serious case. Physicians also recommend the fluid extract of Grindelia robusta for cases of poison from Rhus toxicodendron and R. venenata, the latter being the worse of the two species."

Hamilton, Ont. The Connon Floral Co. has purchased a block of land at Stony Creek and will build greenhouses there. The firm has engaged the services of George Cooper, formerly of Rice & Cooper, of the Mountain Greenhouses, North Grimsby, Ont.

SOIL FOR CARNATIONS.

In The Review of December 31, J. E. Weir, Jr., would like some one's experience with clay and sandy soils for carnations. I have tried all kinds of soils, from river bottom soil to heavy clay, and have had best results from well rotted sod from a clay soil, with a liberal dressing of air-slaked lime before the beds were planted. I firmly believe stem-rot originates in the cutting bench. I have lost only nineteen plants out of 9,000 this year. I do not use any bone when planted, but give them a top-dressing of blood and bone the latter part of November, and I keep them as near 48 to 50 degrees as possible, with plenty of air on during fine weather. H. B. McKnight.

THE BEGEROW SEEDLING.

H. B. McKnight, grower for the Begerow Floral Co., Newark, N. J., has a seedling, shown in the accompanying illustration, which is liked so well that a large house of it will be grown next season. It is of the Enchantress color; the result of a cross between Rose-pink Enchantress and White Perfection. The flower is from four to four and three-fourths inches across, with a strong calyx and a stem sufficiently rigid to carry the bloom erect. The Begerow Floral Co. has found it an extra good keeper as well as a non-splitter. It is now in its third year.

THE USE OF CYANIDE.

In Small Houses.

We are much interested in the hydrocyanic acid gas question, and hope that we may know more about it with the aid of those who are using it, although we are inclined to think, from a lack of testimony, that many florists are not using it.

We notice some doubt that it will kill red spider; even Arthur T. Boddington writes us to that effect. But we know it will.

We have a small house, 15x20 feet, with an open side shed eight feet wide at the north end, where we sleep, as we have to tend our fire occasionally. We also have a temporary addition, 10x20, that joins on the south by a door. In the addition we have mostly geraniums, large ones for Decoration day, and in the house 15x20 mostly carnations. Elmer D. Smith, of Adrian, Mich., advised us how to handle the hydrocyanic acid gas, so we read up on those things until we decided the best was none too good for us, and we got our sodium cyanide of A. T. Boddington, as per Smith's advice. We had a druggist weigh out a proper sample according to Smith; also got some tea-cups and used one large spoonful of sulphuric acid and three of water in each cup, allowing two of them in the house 15x20 and one cup in the house 10x20. We wrapped our cyanide in paper and dropped one in the 10x20 and closed the door; then dropped one in the farthest cup in the house 15x20, then another in the last cup, and got out, locking the door. Of course we had fixed our fire for three hours. At the end of the three hours we opened the door and, if not too cold, the ventilators a little, and judging by the smell, we soon closed up and went to bed. Boddington recommends leaving the house closed, I think, for thirty minutes, and Smith for three hours or all night. We have to open our ventilators from the inside. We do not breathe while putting the cyanide in the cups. We do the cyaniding about 5 p. m., so we get the advantage advised of darkness, also coldness.

We buy our sulphuric acid from the creamery, because we cannot get any from the drug stores fit for use for any purpose, and we get our pint bottle filled for 5 cents, and know we are getting a good article.

We find, if we do not rinse our cups, that when we put in the next lot of acid and water it makes a strong, disagreeable and perhaps unhealthy gas. We have found by a year's experience that we need a larger quantity than Smith advised, and are now nearly doubling it. We do not injure any of our various plants, and when we discovered a while ago that some of our plants had a bad dose of red spider we carried them to one end of the house 10x20, where in some verbenas we brought from outdoors we had plenty of green aphis. Then we put one of our loaded cups in with them, shut the door until morning, and then found the remains of the mites where they seemed to have gathered in groups. We look at them occasionally, but they have not moved, nor do we expect they will. We had a few flowering maples, farfugiums, and other things of that nature that those red spiders had taken possession of, and about a week later, December 16, we gave the whole house another dose.

We like it so well we are not thinking of using any other material, but we like to read the experience of others. We know a large house could not be aired out so as to be safe, as we do ours, and the ventilators ought to be so they could be opened from the outside, except where the house is kept closed all night, which we would favor where practicable. The use of this gas removes the tobacco in all forms, or any spraying or any plans to kill insects, for in our experience the gas gets all of them. We were going after black aphis on some mums we bought, without perfect success, when we fumigated and killed all of 'em.

PLANTS FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

Please tell me when to sow seed of candytuft and Petunia Rosy Morn to have them in bloom for Decoration day. Also please tell me the name of the dwarf white stocks with glossy green leaves, used for pots at Decoration time. F. K.

Sow the petunia seed at once in pans of leaf-mold and sand. Make the surface smooth and water it before sowing the seeds. As the seeds are quite fine, do not cover them. Protect with glass and shade with paper until the germination takes place. A moist house, with a temperature of 60 degrees, will be suitable. Candytuft may be sown now or as late as February and flower for Memorial day. It is best to sow it in small pots before the middle of January and grow it cool, later transferring to the benches. The stocks referred to are probably a wallflower-leaved form of the dwarf ten weeks. These are the most satisfactory varieties of stocks to grow in pots or benches for Memorial day.

DUTCH BULBS FOR EASTER.

At what time should hyacinths, tulips and Narcissi be in for Easter, in a violet house which has a night temperature of 45 degrees? Will they all come into bloom at the same time, or do some require a longer time?

J. F. J.

Keep all the bulbs named in a cold cellar, or plunged outdoors with the necessary protection, until a month before they are wanted in flower. So much depends on weather conditions that no hard and fast rule can be made. A couple of clear, bright days will advance them as much as treble the number of dull, cold days. By allowing a month, however, you are sure to have all of them in flower, and probably some of them will need to be held a few days in a cold pit after opening, which is preferable to starting late and forcing hard at the last. The hyacinths will open rather more quickly and are naturally earlier than the tulips and narcissi. C. W.

EELWORMS ON ROSES.

We are sending you today by American Express a rose bush that shows our troubles. We think the cause is eelworms and wish you would kindly let us know whether we are correct. Our soil is a heavy clay one, not very porous. We plowed up a piece of pasture in the fall and worked it again in the spring, mixing in about one-fifth rotted cow and horse manure and adding one hundred pounds of bone meal to five hundred square feet of bench surface. The benches have been top-dressed with bone meal three times since fall and once with rotted cow manure, and just recently we have given them a light mulch of pulverized sheep manure. The same grower has been handling our roses since 1908 and this is the first time we have had any difficulty. We have commenced watering the plants with lime water. If possible, will you kindly state the cause of our trouble, with the remedy, if there is any, and also a preventive? The plants are all of our own propagation and we have not bought any stock for two years. Do you deem it advisable to use affected stock for propagating purposes? K. & G.

The roots of the plants forwarded were badly attacked by nematodes or eelworms, these being responsible for the knots or galls on the roots, which interfere with their discharging their proper functions. Applications of lime water will mitigate the evil in some measure, but will not eradicate the worms. They require something much stronger. Carbon bisulphide will not harm the growing plants and will kill a large proportion of the worms. It can be bought of any druggist at 25 cents per pound can, retail. Make holes twelve to fifteen inches apart each way with a pointed stick, pour in a scant teaspoonful of the liquid in each hole and at once cover it with soil. The carbon is most penetrating when the soil is damp. Do not use any naked lights while applying it, as it is of an explosive nature.

Your soil should be ideal for roses and has been properly prepared. To guard against eelworms another season, you should either sterilize the soil with steam or apply a solution of formaldehyde for the same purpose. Steam, if you can apply it, is to be preferred. There is no good reason why you should not use the stock for propagating purposes, as your plants are not suffering from anthracnose, spot or other organic diseases of the wood or foliage. Still, if you have unaffected plants, we would prefer to use wood from them. C. W.

ROSES DROP THEIR FOLIAGE.

Enclosed you will find some rose leaves taken from my plants. I should like to know what makes them turn yellow and drop off. The trouble started at the bottom of the plants, but is now going up higher. The house is 20x70 feet and eleven feet high. There are three and one-half to four inches of soil in the benches; it is rich, black soil, containing one-fourth rotted cow manure. There is no heat under the benches. The temperature of the house is from 58 to 65 degrees at night, and in the daytime from 60 to 70 degrees at the highest, when the sun shines. I use hot water heat and have a fine heating system, with pipes along the side walls. The roses were planted about June 15 and passed through some terribly hot weather, but did not seem to suffer. I keep them well syringed when the weather will permit. I do not ventilate at night, but always in the daytime when I can. There was no mildew all winter. The varieties are Bride and Bridesmaid. I have had some green fly and just a little red spider. The plants were from 2½-inch to 3-inch pots when planted. I do not water them often, but when needed I soak them well and then let them get moderately dry before watering again. I put a light mulch, one-half inch thick, on the roses about three months ago. I fed with manure water against the bottom of the stalks of the plants, and have also fed about twice with bone meal and a little lime, both dry. The flowers have not been any too big and at present I am not getting many. This yellowing and dropping of the leaves started about a month or six weeks ago. G. F. C.

Feeding, unless done with extreme care in midwinter, is liable to cause dropping of the leaves. Perhaps you have given your plants a rather too heavy dose of bone, which may have started the trouble. Then again, if the soil in the benches has been allowed to become too dry between waterings, it would cause the same trouble to develop. Some of the leaves forwarded, although pretty well shriveled, showed traces of red spider. You are running too high a night temperature for Brides and Bridesmaids. Keep it as near 56 degrees as you can; it would be far better to have it a little lower than to have it go up as high as 65 degrees. With the higher night temperature spider will be more likely to make headway and the growths will be weaker than when grown cooler. Brides and Bridesmaids, while good old roses, are now hard to sell in the markets. Another season try the Killarneys, both pink and white. They succeed under similar conditions to those given the older sorts and sell much better. They are the most popular roses in America today, and anyone who could grow Brides and Bridesmaids can succeed with the Killarneys. C. W.

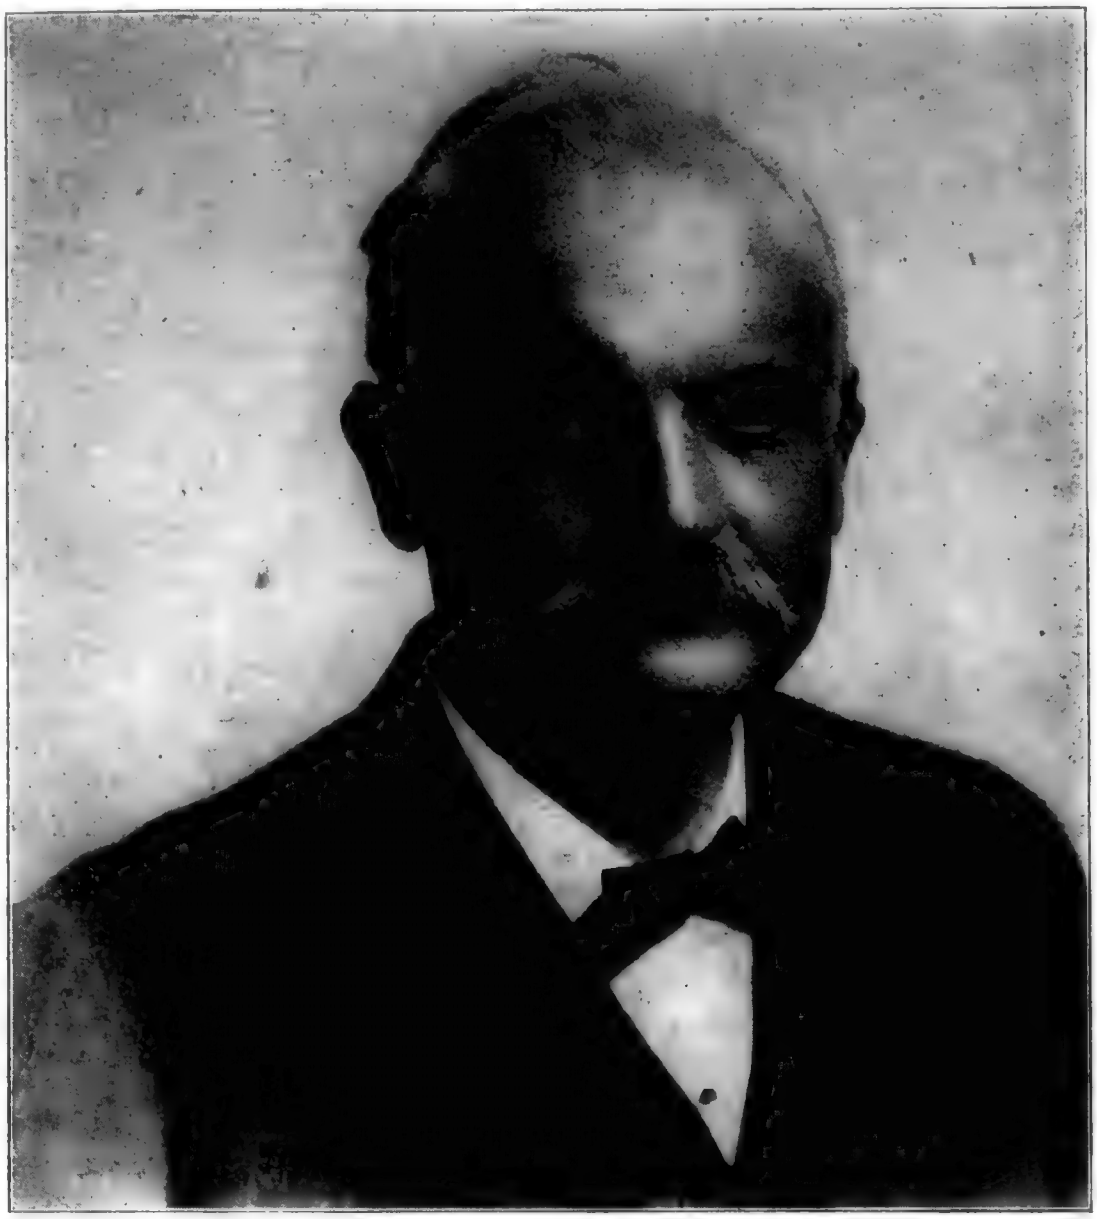
SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Propagation.

At last we are getting something approximating winter weather and, with heavier firing, the propagating bench should now be kept filled, as the bottom heat for the coming two months will be steadier than at any other period of the year. Crotons will root readily where a brisk bottom heat is maintained. They do not need any closed case, as often recommended. Keep them protected from the sun and air currents and keep them well soaked with water and few will fail to root. Colored dracænas are also of easy propagation, either from tops or from pieces of the stems. Dieffenbachias can be similarly propagated. Portions of stem, one to two inches long, if just covered with sand, will in the majority of cases send out growths and roots. Ficus elastica roots best in a mixture of moss and sand and the leaves should be tied up to a small stake. Propagation by ringing the stems with moss can be done now, but the plants root much more quickly into it in summer. Begonia Rex is easily rooted, either by laying whole mature leaves on the sand and pinning them to it or by simply cutting the central portions of the leaves in pieces and putting them in the cutting bench in rows.

Bedding geraniums should now be propagated in quantity. It is also a good time to root a good batch of coleus and then throw away the old and bug-laden stock plants. Alternantheras can also be rooted. So, also, can fuchsias, heliotropes, bouvardias—these either from pieces of roots or soft cuttings; variegated vincas, acacias, genistas, English ivy; any chrysanthemums of which it is desired to work up a good batch, and many other plants. From this time on the cutting bench should be kept filled all the time.

Lorraine Begonias.



The propagation of Lorraine begonies, if not yet commenced, should be no longer delayed. It is to be hoped that sales have not been so close that insufficient stock has been kept for propagating purposes. Leaf cuttings are best at this early stage. Take off the stalk of the leaf. I like to cut a little piece of the stem attached to the leaf stalk also, but this is not necessary. Let the leaf just touch the sand, which should be of a porous nature. If too fine, the leaves are more liable to rot. With a brisk bottom heat, a top temperature of 60 degrees and one good watering a day, few of the leaves should fail to root. Do not overlook Glory of Cincinnati. It has come wonderfully to the fore this season and will be even more in evidence a year hence. It is going to give the old Lorraine a close call for first favorite. Glory of Cincinnati was given an award of merit last month in London and the papers in Europe speak flatteringly of it.

Spiræas.

A batch of spiræas should be started now in a warm house. If they have been exposed to frost for some time they will break more uniformly. Give an abundant water supply. When growth is well started, be careful not to give the plants any heavy fumigations, or the foliage will be scorched.

Poinsettias.

Flowers of poinsettias are of little value when Christmas is past and it will be just as well to lay the plants to rest under the benches; or, if the stock plants are planted out, lift them and pack them close together in boxes in a frost-proof shed for the winter. As soon as the plants in pots or pans have dried out well, they can be shaken out, packed close together in flats and stored in a dry but not too warm shed or storeroom. If left under the benches in the greenhouses too long, the constant drip may rot some and start others into premature growth.

Fuchsias.

Fuchsia plants which have been resting for some time should now be pruned back a little and placed in heat. Spray freely, but do not water much at the root until the growths have started. There will soon be a nice crop of cuttings ready, and these, if placed in the cutting bench, will produce nice 4-inch plants for May sales. The fuchsia is an old-fashioned flower, but retains its popularity. The late Victor Lemoine, among the hundreds of novelties he raised, gave us the first double fuchsias and the first double zonale geraniums, which I believe would entitle him to the gratitude of American trade growers.

Lily of the Valley.

In January it is safe to start the new crop of valley pips. They come away irregularly if placed in heat earlier. Flowers from the new crop are easily distinguished from the cold storage ones, being stronger and finer in every way. Be sure that the pips are given a good bottom heat, say 80 to 85 degrees, with a top heat 20 to 25 degrees lower. Use six inches of clean sand to plant them in; this retains the heat well. Keep the case darkened in the early stages of growth and water once a day. Stop watering as the flowers open, or damping may ensue. Give light and air more freely as the growth advances, especially if some foliage is wanted.

Lilacs.

The earliest forcings of lilacs are better done in the dark, but from now on they will start readily in any warm, moist house. There is considerable call for nice pot lilacs in winter and, of course, such must be grown in full light all the time. Syringe them freely and they will soon break. As the flowers expand, a slightly lower temperature is better and gives the flowers more substance for withstanding the rather trying conditions of the average store, where there is usually considerable draft, and a plant that has been hard forced to the last will soon wilt down when exposed to cold air currents.

VANCOUVER'S LARGEST PLACE.

Few people in the trade whose travels have not recently taken them to the Pacific northwest realize the rapidity with which the greenhouse business is growing there. Brown Bros. & Co., Ltd., is the largest as well as one of the oldest concerns north of the Canadian line. The original location was at Vancouver, but a place was later taken over at Port Hammond and still later one at Victoria.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph which was taken December 18, one week before Christmas, in one of their eleven houses of carnations, each 30x200, from which they cut 18,000 blooms in the week following. This is at the Port Hammond place, where there also is one house of calla lilies, one house of plumosus, and one house just being planted to young carnation stock. They have twenty acres of land at this place, which has just been cleared of stumps and plowed, and which will be planted to nursery stock of all descriptions, except that land which will be kept to grow the carnation stock and for growing asters, dahlias, sweet peas, etc., for the store in Vancouver, which is twenty-four miles away. Port Hammond is on the main line of the C. P. R. The place in Vancouver covers one block, or fourteen houses, 30 x 200, which are used for bedding and all kinds of pot plants, palms, etc. There are five houses of chrysanthemums and four houses of roses, of which they had a fine lot for Christmas, Killarneys, Richmonds and Beauties, also thousands of mums. The concern has two stores in Vancouver. The main store, on Hastings street, which was packed with customers all Christmas week, had twenty men and women to wait on customers. It took six wagons to deliver the goods December 25 and four wagons delivered all day Sunday. The other store, at Granville and Hastings streets, also did exceptionally well, being opened only two months, and the Victoria store did finely for Christmas. It had just been bought by the company, as had the Fairview-Esquimalt Nurseries, also of Victoria. The latter contains seven and one-half acres of land, with twelve greenhouses, which contain roses, carnations, mums and pot plants. The nursery is only about two miles from the center of Victoria.

The company consists of Jos. F., Wm. H., Alfred C. and Edw. Brown, being four brothers, and the father, Joseph Brown. Joseph Brown is president and manager; Alfred C., head of nursery and shipping and Vancouver greenhouses; Edw. Brown, manager of stores and buyer; Jos. F. Brown, manager of Port Hammond greenhouses; Wm. H. Brown, manager of the Victoria greenhouses.

In a Carnation House of Brown Bros. & Co.

Catlin, Ill.—Mrs. Theodore Terpening has purchased the greenhouses of Scott Harris. The business will be conducted at the present location, in the north part of town, until about the middle of July, when the greenhouses will be removed to one of the vacant lots belonging to Mrs. Terpening in the southwest part of town, near her home. The business was started about four years ago

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Ella Meinhardt.

Mrs. Ella Meinhardt, wife of Fred H. Meinhardt, one of the well known florists of St. Louis, Mo., died Thursday, January 4, after an illness of several weeks. Her death will be a great shock to her many friends in the trade, as she was well known among the ladies of the S. A. F., having attended all the late conventions. Mrs. Meinhardt died of blood poisoning following an operation at a St. Louis hospital. She was a member of the Ladies' Home Circle of St. Louis, practically all of whom attended the funeral, which was held Saturday afternoon from her late residence, 7041 Florissant avenue, burial being at Bellefontaine cemetery. A large number of local florists paid their last respects and extended their sympathy to the bereaved husband.

The pallbearers were Fred C. Weber, C. C. Sanders, Harry Young and Theodore Miller. Many beautiful floral designs gave silent testimony to the high regard in which Mrs. Meinhardt was held.

Mrs. Agnes C. Ludemann.

Mrs. Agnes C. Ludemann, wife of San Francisco's pioneer nurseryman, J. F. Ludemann, died at the family residence December 29. She was the mother of Adolph Ludemann, the well known Millbrae nurseryman; of Mrs. H. L. Kuster, and foster mother of Frederick Buss, of the California Seed Co. A resident of San Francisco for over forty years, and the wife of its best known horticulturist, Mrs. Ludemann was known to all the trade, as well as to a large circle of friends in religious and fraternal organizations. The home was for many years near the Presidio gate and was only given up when ill health caused Mr. Ludemann to dispose of his large nursery interests to other parties. Mrs. Ludemann was a native of Hanover, Germany, and was buried from the St. Markus Evangelical Lutheran church, the interment being at Mt. Olivet cemetery December 31. A large number of the trade from the bay cities attended and many beautiful floral designs testified to the esteem in which Mrs. Ludemann was held.

Michael Murphy.

Michael Murphy, Newport, R. I., the last of the old-time gardeners of Bellevue avenue, died on New Year's day, aged 73 years. December 29 he was stricken in the afternoon with apoplexy and never regained consciousness. For forty-six years he was in charge of one estate, remaining through several changes in ownership. It is at present the summer home of H. P. Whitney. Mr. Murphy was a native of Queenstown, Ireland, and arrived in this country fifty-nine years ago, going directly to Newport. With his wife and two daughters he lived in the gardener's lodge and looked after the welfare of the house as well as the grounds when the family was absent. He also leaves four sons.

Slingerlands, N. Y.—Fred Goldring now grows a continuous crop of lilacs the year around.

Huntington, Ind.—Bieberich & Weber's holiday trade was the best they have known in their three years of business.

NEW YORK.

[The regular New York market report and news notes are unavoidably omitted this week, on account of the absence of the correspondent, J. Austin Shaw, who accompanied his wife to Bermuda and was not able to return as soon as he had planned. Mrs. Shaw expects to spend the rest of the winter in Bermuda.]

Club Meeting.

There was a large and enthusiastic attendance at the meeting Monday night, January 8. The principal business was the installation of officers for 1912. The officers installed were Joseph A. Manda, president; Philip Einsmann, vice-president; John Young, secretary; W. C. Rickards, W. Mas, John Donaldson, R. F. Kessler and William Duckham, trustees.

For the annual dinner and celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary — Charles B. Weathered, Charles Schenck, W. F. Shendon, A. M. Henshaw, J. A. Shaw and Alex. McConnell.

The board of trustees made its report, showing over $4,000 in the treasury. Secretary Young reported 275 members in good standing, after sixty-five had been dropped by order of the board of trustees.

A. P. Smith, J. K. M. L. Farquhar, J. G. Fluti, A. Macdonald and A. L. Young were elected, and thirteen names were proposed for membership.

The trustees recommended that the junior ex-president be made a member of the board of trustees.

John Lewis Childs exhibited Calla Elliottiana.

Various Notes.

John Young, 54 West Twenty-eighth street, filed a petition in bankruptcy January 4, with liabilities of $17,994 and nominal assets of $3,200, consisting of thirty-two shares of stock of the John Young Co., which made an assignment December 28 and of which Mr. Young is president. Of his liabilities $17,026 is on account of the company on notes. Among the creditors are the King Construction Co., $9,600; H. C. Schreiber, $4,300, and H. A. Mahran, $2,200.

The Smart Set Floral Co., 2297 Broadway, has made an assignment to Edwin B. Koening. The company was incorporated August 4, 1909, with capital stock $5,000. Claude M. Harburger is president.

REUTER MAKES ANNOUNCEMENT.

L. J. Reuter, for S. J. Reuter & Son, Inc., asks the publication of the following in regard to Reuter's strain of Double White Killarney:

"We desire to state to the growers that on account of the behavior of our Double White Killarney during the past few weeks we have decided to lay the facts fairly before our customers and the florists in general. While this rose came up to our highest expectations all through the spring, summer and fall, it has been a disappointment to us for the past few weeks and we cannot feel justified in putting this rose on the market without having the matter clearly understood.

"There is no fault to be found with its growth. It is free and vigorous, but the buds have not been opening properly of late, and while this will only occur through a very short season, it is only fair that the growers be informed of this fact. We feel confident that the rose is an excellent variety for at least ten months in the year, but the blooms on some of the plants do not open so well as they should during the dark season.

"By careful selection of stock this whole trouble can be eliminated and a great deal has been accomplished in that way, but sufficient time has not been allowed to enable this weeding out process to be completed. We were afraid in the beginning that it might be a mistake to introduce Double White Killarney so soon, preferring to wait another year at least, when we could have worked out all undesirable stock, but we allowed ourselves to step over our better judgment and to keep company with its running mate. Now we are confident, however, that it was a mistake, as the rose could have been worked up to a higher state of perfection by waiting.

"As the rose stands now it is excellent for summer, being far ahead of Kaiserin or any other white for that season, and in fact it is far ahead of any white during all but the most severe part of the winter season. A little further selection will weed out the remaining stock which does not stand the short days.

"We would say to all customers who have ordered stock from us that they are at liberty to cancel if they choose. If you desire a rose which will make good through spring, summer and fall and through ten months out of twelve, grow Double White Killarney, as we are confident that it will pay, but if you do not care to do this we stand ready to cancel any orders so requested. Any to whom we have already shipped stock are at liberty to return all or part and money will be refunded for the same.

The Review brings results.

IF you don't get your Richmond crop for Christmas, and if you do get it but do not get metropolitan prices, then Richmond does not pay.

NOT a few subscribers save themselves the bother of annual renewal by sending The Review $2, $3, or sometimes $5, instead of the dollar-bill that insures fifty-two visits of the paper.

UNLESS this season's infusion of yellow be taken into account, the tendencies are toward narrowing the rose supply to pink and white. In carnations white and flesh-pink are in overwhelming predominance.

THE flower business ever is an affair of the weather. The severe cold wave that marked the arrival of the new year shut off trade almost as did the record heat of last July. Please, Mr. Weatherman, go lightly on the extremes.

DON'T let February 14, St. Valentine's day, find you unprepared. The last few years the St. Valentine's day demand for flowers has increased several fold. Prepare your stock, trim your windows and advertise in your local newspapers.

IT seems strange that men who appear to want only perfectly innocent information or legitimate advice will take such infinite pains to conceal their identity when writing for it. It should be apparent that full names never are used in replying through The Review and that without them no reply whatever is possible.

THE growers who sell their cuts in the wholesale markets had by last season nearly all dropped Maid and Bride, because they found they could not get the extra money necessary to make these varieties pay as well as the Killarneys do. By next planting time the small local growers who retail their own cut, and who do not figure so closely as do the growers who wholesale, will have seen the point and these two old varieties that were ubiquitous ten years ago will have practically disappeared from American greenhouses.

IT will interest the retail florists to know that in the textile journals discussion is going on as to how ribbon manufacturers can get prices back to a profitable level. It is the general opinion that the loom capacity has become so great that production exceeds normal demand and that prices now, and through 1911, were too low to leave the margin necessary to insure the stability of the ribbon manufacturing business.

MOVING THE CHRISTMAS STOCK.

That The Review did its part in distributing the Christmas stock has been apparent from the letters that have accompanied remittances from the advertisers. Like these:

That page advertisement surely turned the plants; could not keep the packing up. Had an immense stock, but cleaned out and refused orders on some varieties.—C. H. Frey, Lincoln, Neb.

We think The Review rendered us exceptionally valuable service in selling our Christmas plants. Business began to be good from the first appearance of our short paragraphs in your classified columns, and continued to increase up to the last issue in which they appeared. And it did not cost us much, at that.—W. H. Gullett & Sons, Lincoln, Ill.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Never in the history of Chicago has the mercury remained below zero so long as in the last week. It passed zero on the way down at 6 p. m. Thursday, January 4, and it was seventy-four hours before it got that warm again, at 8 p. m. Sunday, January 7.

Cold snaps there are in numbers every winter, but usually they are of brief duration. Only once before is there record of three consecutive days on which the mercury did not get above zero, and that was many years ago. This time not only were all duration records broken, but time after time 10 degrees below zero was touched, and just before the cold wave broke 15 degrees below was registered. This was in the city; in the country it went to 22 degrees below.

So long a paragraph is given to the weather because it at the same time describes to the knowing ones the state of the cut flower market. In severely cold weather the demand for flowers is erratic and the supply still more unstable. Such business as there is can be handled only at great inconvenience and mental discomforts are added to the physical ones.

All comparisons between the first ten days of this year and last are upset by the cold. No one can tell if business is starting off as strong as a year ago, or whether the supply is taking the same course as in 1911. The tendency of prices during the cold wave has been downward, for the sun has been bright most of the time and cuts, especially of roses, have not been reduced as much as one might suppose. There have been enough Beauties, roses and carnations. Violets, of course, have suffered most of all, because of the impossibility of street wear. Cattleyas have come in strongly in the face of the cold, splendid Trianæ now being available in quantity at lower prices than have prevailed for a month. Jonquils, tulips and fuchsias have come in more abundantly, but have scarcely been needed; the outlet has not been such as to occasion any special request for flowers, the principal call being for stock for work. Valley has been scarce and at the open-

ORCHIDS

EXTRA FANCY CATTLEYA TRIANAE

Now that Orchids have become such an important part of the Retailer's stock, it is necessary that all buyers learn to distinguish between the varieties of Cattleyas. No high-class store can any more afford to hand out Percivaliana when Trianæ is to be had than a good hotel could afford to serve dried-apple pie instead of the real article.

Most of the growers are cutting Percivaliana, but we offer the choicest Trianæ in quantity.

BEAUTIES

A Fine Crop is on

We never are without Beauties of the very best quality. The present cut is large, and we can supply all lengths of stem. These Beauties are business-builders. Try them and you will find them so.

VIOLETS

Supply and Demand Both Center Here

Those who know this market recognize our house as Violet headquarters. Single or double, you will get the cream of the crops if you order of us. It is none too soon to begin thinking of St. Valentine's Day—the Violet's the flower.

KILLARNEYS

White and Pink

These are in good crop and we can supply as fine stock as this market ever saw, in quantity, for weeks to come. In fact, we never have been so well fixed to fill all orders as we are this January.

CARNATIONS

We have a heavy cut of Carnations, and the quality is right up to top notch—no danger of not getting your order filled if you send it to us.

All Greens of Best Quality.

ing of the present week there was a sudden spurt in the call for white roses, short white mostly.

Hunt's Changes.

It is announced that Paul M. Bryant has purchased the controlling stock interest in the E. H. Hunt corporation from Mrs. Hunt and C. M. Dickinson, Mr. Dickinson retiring from the management of the business. No other changes are under contemplation.

The house of Hunt is among the oldest in the west. The business was established in 1878, by E. H. Hunt, who conducted it until his death, when the management devolved upon Mrs. Hunt's son, Mr. Dickinson. The business was incorporated in 1906. Mr. Bryant came into the business February 1, 1911, becoming secretary of the corporation. He is a young man, full of vim, but of conservative business training and well equipped to carry on the development of the property that now has come into his control.

Club Meeting.

The severities of a zero night did not serve to cut down the attendance at the annual election of the Chicago Florists' Club January 4, there being 171 members in good standing present to exercise the franchise. The meeting was held at the Bismarck instead of the Union, to get a larger hall. One of the first things done was to elect the forty-four new members whose names were published last month, to give them the right to vote. The balloting resulted as follows:

For president—P. J. Foley, 101; H. E. Philpott, 68.

For sergeant-at-arms—Michael Fink, 101; Geo. Goebel, 36; Geo. Grim, 13.

Carl Cropp withdrew, leaving the vice-presidency to D. A. Robertson. Secretary A. T. Pyfer and Treasurer E. F. Winterson were without opponents and H. N. Bruns, E. C. Amling and Walter Scott were the only nominees for trustees, three to be elected.

A. C. Kohlbrand occupied the chair during the election, John Zech, Joseph Foerster and George Asmus acting as tellers.

Mr. Philpott moved to make the presidential choice unanimous and President-elect Foley made a brief plea for coöperation to make a big success of the S. A. F. and H. E. Philpott gave assurances of his assistance. During Mr. Philpott's year in the chair the membership has increased more than in any other year in the club's history, ninety-one new members having been elected, and the report of Treasurer Winterson showed a balance of $1,104.32.

An offer from the Hotel La Salle of free use of rooms for meetings was referred to the trustees.

August Poehlmann moved to increase the secretary's salary to $125 per year. The chair asked to have it put in writing in the form of a resolution and introduced at the next meeting.

W. N. Rudd moved that all delinquents be put on the same basis by rebating all back dues in excess of $4. After long discussion this was lost.

Primula malacoides was exhibited by Vaughan's Greenhouses and two splendid cattleya flowers by Chas. J. Bond.

Visitors included C. C. Pollworth, Milwaukee, and I. Rosnosky, Philadelphia, both of whom are members.

Various Notes.

There has been a great deal of stock, both incoming and outgoing, frozen during the unprecedented spell of below zero weather. Wholesalers, retailers and growers all have had their troubles. Among the growers, it has been a struggle to keep from freezing up. It is reported that the worst loss among the growers has been sustained by A. E. Hunt & Co., whose boiler gave out during the cold weather. Mr. Hunt, who has selling space on the floor with J. A. Budlong and Sinner Bros., told Mr. Sinner that it would be several months before they would have anything more to market.

It is reported that John T. Muir has leased a store, 17 x 31 feet, in the new Goddard building to be erected at the southwest corner of Wabash avenue and Monroe street. The store adjoins the entrance to the building and the lease, which runs for ten years from the completion of the building at a term rent of $90,000, includes also 2,000 square feet of basement space. Mr. Muir has stores and greenhouses at Thirty-sixth street and Michigan boulevard, and at Forty-seventh street and Grand boulevard.

The annual meeting of the Horticultural Society of Chicago, which was scheduled to be held at the Art Institute January 9, was postponed to Tuesday, April 9.

John Mangel has been sued for $10,000 damages by a woman who claims to have been injured when the awning fell in front of Mr. Mangel's store some months ago.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. has joined the ranks of those who are introducing Double White Killarneys. They describe theirs as the Poehlmann strain.

J. F. Bernard has given up the lease on the N. P. Miller greenhouses at Wilmette and is again with Fischer Bros., Evanston.

Peter Reinberg is propagating 100,000 American Beauties for his own replanting needs this season.

N. J. Wietor has recovered from an exceedingly severe cold.

Emil Buettner, C. L. Washburn, E. B. Washburn and Andrew Benson went to Detroit on the Michigan Central's flyer Tuesday afternoon.

George Reinberg has placed an order for 10,000 My Maryland for early spring planting.

E. H. Hunt and Bassett & Washburn have renewed their leases at 131 North Wabash avenue.

August Grossman is offering his establishment for sale or rent.

B. J. Blameuser says that with one possible exception the Niles Center carnation growers have cut more flowers per plant than they had at this date last season.

Charles Zapfe has been doing right nicely since his start at Sixty-first street and South Park avenue. Overhead expenses are small and business exceeded expectations up to the time the cold wave struck.

Frank Johnson, of the A. L. Randall Co., started January 7 for one of his periodical two weeks' trips with a line of samples of florists' supplies. Perhaps it was because of weather conditions that he headed south.

E. E. Pieser and wife went to West Baden January 8, expecting to meet H. R. Fisher and wife, of Kalamazoo.

Kyle & Foerster say that the principal trouble during the zero weather has been to clean up on violets.

C. W. McKellar lost a big shipment of fine eastern valley January 6, frozen in transit.

The Chicago Carnation Co. says the rooted cuttings business has started off heavy this season.

At Winterson's Seed Store everybody is busy. Editor Degnan is writing the spring catalogue, a force of girls is papering seeds and everyone else is working on inventory.

Two large bungalows, on lots adjoining, have been purchased in Birchwood by Messrs. Baumann and Gelderman, of L. Baumann & Co. David Chambers, formerly a salesman for Sanger Bros., of Dallas, Tex., is now Texas representative for Baumann & Co.

It is reported that E. P. Bunck has sold his interest in the Andersen Specialty Co., manufacturers of Daylite Glass Cleaner, to Mr. Andersen.

Harry Garland, of Geo. M. Garland Co., has been making a three days' visit at Cleveland and vicinity.

A postal from Curtis Kindler, of the Raedlein Basket Co., shows him in Germany, where he is selecting the Easter line of baskets.

H. N. Bruns says that last week brought him more calls for cut valley than he could fill, in many cases only half the orders being sent out.

The Chicago Pump Co. has moved its office and factory to larger and more desirable quarters at 906-910 West Lake street; increasing business being the cause of the change.

CINCINNATI.

The Gateway of the South.

Last week started with business quite brisk, the close, however, being far different, as no one line cleaned out entirely and a larger or smaller quantity of everything was held over for the early part of this week's business. The opening of this week was essentially the same as the close of the preceding one; none of the buyers hurried around as though they were anxious lest they be unable to secure a sufficient amount of stock.

The supply of all kinds of roses is adequate, Killarney and White Killarney naturally being the leaders, and it may be added that some elegant stock is being offered in both of them. Richmond offerings, too, include some fine stock, while good Brides, Ivory and Golden Gate can also be easily obtained on Third avenue. American Beauties are finding a ready request.

The shipment of carnations into the wholesale houses is large; in fact, at the time of this writing larger than necessary, but the good ones have been cleaning up fairly well. The culls, of course, do not move rapidly and prices have shaded considerably.

In other stock, some lines are finding a fair call, while others are not so active. Last week was the first one in which all single violets failed to move promptly; the choice sold in a hurry, while smaller stock did not sell at all. Doubles, too, are somewhat slow.

ORCHIDS—SPECIAL

We have an unusually large and fine supply of that splendid orchid, Cattleya Trianae. Also a large crop of Percivaliana at lower prices.

Lilies, both longiflorum and callas, sell nicely. The supply of narcissi and Romans has let up considerably, but the market for them has not grown better in a proportionate inverse ratio; it remains the same as at the time of the last letter. Sales in valley have been good, but not sufficient to clean up the offerings. Orchids are in demand locally for corsages for the many social affairs. Stevia, cut begonias of the Lorraine type, and a few cut poinsettias are the other flowers offered.

Business in green goods has been excellent and the shipping demand for them is stronger than the demand for flowers.

Club Meeting.

It was impossible to get a quorum together for the club meeting Monday, January 8. Only five, President Gus Adrian, Secretary Alex. Ostendarp, R. Witterstaetter, O. H. Hoffmeister and Chas. H. Hoffmeister, summoned courage enough to face the wintry blasts; they were "some blasts," too.

Hoppe at Adrian, Mich., are bringing the highest prices of any in the market.

Wm. Murphy went to Detroit this week to show blooms of Delhi. Al. Sunderbruch also decided to go.

C. C. Murphy has a lot of callas that are as tall as an average man. The blooms are fine in proportion.

The Cincinnati Cut Flower Exchange has been doing a rushing business in leucothoe.

J. Albert McCullough lost his sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Strong, of Pleasant Ridge, who died last Saturday. Advices state that the grim reaper removed Mrs. Henry Behrens, the wife of the Middletown, O., florist, on the same day.

L. H. Kyrk's Killarney have been cleaning up quickly each day.

Wm. Murphy states that another fine looking batch of Delhi cuttings have just been put in the sand.

Usually business is dull just after the holidays, but such is not the case here this time. Decorations for New Year's affairs were quite elaborate, and since then parties have been frequent. Roses are scarce, but carnations are more abundant. We are having some of that cold weather that we read about up north, the thermometer dropping to 13 degrees below zero Sunday morning, January 7. It snowed all day January 6 and we have about six inches of it.

Various Notes.

The Wm. Blackman Floral Co. reports a good trade, funeral work being quite heavy. The store employees held their annual banquet at noon January 3, the occasion being in honor of the forty-ninth birthday of George Blackman. Covers were laid for eight people and an enjoyable time was had. Toasts were given and responded to.

Julius Niednagel & Sons have been busy with funeral work and parties since New Year's. There seems to have been no slump in business with them. They are having a nice cut of roses, carnations, violets, hyacinths, etc.

Ben Kramer has been receiving some nice carnations from Otto Kuebler, of Newburg, Ind. Trade is good with him.

Karl Zeidler has to hustle around in order to get enough flowers for his trade.

Louis Fritsch is quite a weather prophet. He predicted a cold spell; we got it. His carnations are in fine condition.

Royston & Fenton report a scarcity of roses. E. L. Fenton was at the poultry show nearly all the week, being a member of the association and an exhibitor. H. J. Royston also exhibited some of his poultry. E. L. F.

COLUMBUS, O.

The Market.

Trade has been good since Christmas, with stock rather scarce on account of cloudy weather, especially carnations, of which there have hardly been enough to go the rounds on several occasions. Roses are coming fine, but quantity is just about equal to the demand. Sweet peas have been scarce and the demand heavy. There was quite a call for valley last week and the local stock was all used up, as well as quite a few shipments from outside.

The demand for New Year's flowers was not up to expectations, but still there was quite a good deal of stock moved. Pot plants have moved rather slowly since Christmas.

Various Notes.

Sherman Stephens reports heavy business out his way.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. had the misfortune to be put out of business for a few days on account of a fire January 5. The entire rear of the building and the third floor was about cleaned out completely. Luckily the part occupied by this firm suffered the least damage and they were all ready for business January 10, by boarding up about fifty feet back from the front.

E. Metzmaier is trying to get caught up with his collections, which fell behind during the Christmas rush.

Jas. McKellar, of the Fifth Avenue Floral Co., wrenched his knee badly in running for a car on the morning of January 2, and he has been laid up ever since.

Ben Flynn is on deck at Graff Bros., following his operation, and is getting on nicely. J. M.

Akron, O.—McFarlands, Florists, had a highly satisfactory holiday business. Nearly all available stock was cleaned out. The plant trade was especially good.

The Market.

The market has fallen off a little. The severe cold and snow have had more effect on the demand than on the supply. People do not shop much in arctic weather. This eliminates transient business in the shops and on the street. The shipping orders are the strength of the market. The orders, particularly for the south, are just as heavy as before the wintry change in weather. They call for much fine stock. The local shops are not so lively as a week ago, although the fashionable florists have all they can do in supplying flowers for the social events. The general market is so much in their favor that they can buy all but fancy stock at moderate prices. The absence of the job lot buyers on Saturday was felt. Many odds and ends were left over that would ordinarily have been sold. Carnations have increased in number and fallen in price more than other flowers. Beauties are firm; other roses are easy, except the top grades. Daffodils, mostly Trumpet Major, are sufficiently plentiful for active trading. Freesia has come and there are some tulips of only moderate flower and stem in all colors. Snapdragons are off crop and hard to obtain. Wallflowers are in fair supply. Asparagus is in brisk demand.

White roses of the shorter grades are in active demand at prices that are better than those paid for colored. Many shipments arrived partly frozen January 5 and 6.

The First Assembly.

A terrific gale was blowing down Walnut street, the wind roaring and whistling around the corner of the great hotel at Broad in a way that made the pedestrians duck their heads and gasp for breath as they scurried along. The thermometer was hovering around 10 degrees, the sudden change from the day before making it seem more like 10 below. The bright lights twinkled invitingly from the windows of the flower shop in the Bellevue-Stratford. Inside was a southern tropical scene, enlivened by northern activity. The refreshing green of palms and ferns and the soft colors of the flowers, with their delicate perfume, were in striking contrast to the fierce winter blast outside. Salesmen, clerks and delivery boys were actively engaged under the direction of the senior member of the firm. "Wait a moment," he said, and a few moments later, "We have a little decoration upstairs that I would like you to see; this young man will show you the way." Through the corridors of the Bellevue-Stratford, up to the second floor, where the ball room, so perfect in proportions and in architectural beauty, was in evening dress, we went.

It was the night of the First Assembly ball. The decorations of the ball room were beautiful. There was no attempt at elaborate display, simply the touch that the Habermehls so well understand, which enhances rather than overshadows the natural beauty of the ball room. A bank of green foliage, plants without a blemish, screened the orchestra. Specimen pans of Begonia Glory of Cincinnati, birch-bark-covered, arranged to bring out their glowing beauty; specimen plants of bird's nest fern (Asplenium Nidus Avis) surmounting the pillars; old-fashioned smilax, gracefully twined, shaded electric lights—that was all, but done by a master's hand.

In a room adjoining, Edward Habermehl disclosed a pre-Assembly dinner; sixty-two covers; a hollow oblong table with rounded corners, the center filled with ferns with just a little touch of color, the ferns arranged with studied care to produce that natural effect that seems so easy when you have it done and is so extremely difficult to do. In the room beyond was another dinner decoration, also of plants, with more colors and less foliage in the hollow center. Mr. Habermehl said there were several other dinner tables to be arranged with flowers.

The supper tables were decorated entirely with pink roses. The effect from the doorway was indescribably beautiful—delicate pink and white and green, illuminated by soft, shaded lights, in striking contrast to the bitter night outside.

February Meeting.

J. Otto Thilow, president of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, has planned a particularly fine meeting for Tuesday evening, February 6. It is understood that Arthur A. Niessen will have an able essayist, probably on carnations, on that evening. Some say it will be Edmund A. Harvey; others assert it will be Henry M. Weiss himself. Be that as it may, there will be an essay of merit. Then, Mr. Thilow said: "We are promised a visit from Richard Vincent, Jr., president of the Society of American Florists, who will speak at this meeting." Furthermore, there will be the reports from our fellow citizens of what they saw at Detroit during the meeting of the American Rose and Carnation Societies. Last, but by no means least, there will be refreshments; Mr. Thilow has abiding faith in refreshments as a magnetic power.

Exhibits of roses, carnations and other flowers of merit are cordially invited; they will be judged by the exhibition committee and viewed by the members. Intending exhibitors should send their flowers, prepaid, to David Rust, Horticultural hall, Broad street below Locust, in time to arrive Tuesday afternoon, February 6.

Various Notes.

Robert Pyle, president of the Conard & Jones Co., has gone to Detroit to deliver his illustrated lecture on "Roses Abroad," before the American Rose Society, January 11. Mr. Pyle, who was the American judge in the rose garden of the Bagatelle, Paris, France, last June, has some exceptionally fine

The Market.

Supplies have shortened up quite considerably owing to the severely cold weather we have had, the first of its kind this season. The demand also has fallen off, as is usual during severely cold weather, but prices are fairly well maintained all around. Roses are selling moderately well. The quality leaves nothing to be desired. The best Beauties make $6 to $9 per dozen. There is also a good call for Richmonds, which are of extra good quality. Funeral work has created a better call for White Killarneys, while pink Killarneys are selling well. For the small varieties, such as Bon Silene and Safrano, there is a steady, if somewhat limited call. The yellow roses, such as Mrs. Ward, Hillingdon and others, continue to be in demand. Carnations have shortened up in quantity. The prevailing rates are $2 to $5 per hundred, a few fancies higher. Violets are opening more slowly and do not move so well in cold weather. The supply is now practically limited to singles; doubles only come from a few growers.

Sweet peas are selling better. Liliums are also in demand. There is an excellent supply of fine freesia, Purity being the leader. Mignonette is more plentiful; the better grades sell well. Marguerites sell well, also bachelor's buttons, of which latter the supply is yet rather limited. Paper Whites and Romans continue overplentiful, and the supply of yellow narcissi is increasing, causing a drop in prices. Tulips are not yet plentiful. Some cut Dutch hyacinths are in and the supply of stevia is heavy. Several shipments of these and other flowers arrived frozen January 6. Valley is abundant. There are some good Cattleya Trianæ in addition to Percivaliana. The gardenias now arriving from local growers are the best ever seen around Boston. Good grades sell well. Both plumosus and Sprengeri are selling well.

Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

At a meeting of the board of trustees January 6, an additional appropriation of $700 for prizes was voted. It was voted that a gold medal be offered on behalf of the society at the great International Flower Show in London in May next for the best display of roses of American origin in pots. J. K. M. L. Farquhar was appointed a delegate to represent the society at the same show, and others will be selected later.

At the annual meeting of the society, held the same day, the attendance was meager. It would be a good plan to change the hour of meeting and secure a creditable attendance. The treasurer's report showed receipts for the last year to be $24,300 and expenses $21,300. The hall rentals are gradually increasing, being $2,800 more in 1911 than in 1910. The reports of the plant, fruit, vegetable and other committees were read or ordered printed.

William Thatcher, gardener to Mrs. J. L. Gardner, and Martin Sullivan, gardener to William Whitman, each had a splendid lot of cyclamens at Horticultural hall January 6, which were awarded gratuities.

The opening lecture of the winter course will be given at Horticultural hall January 13 at 2 p. m., by R. W. Stimson, of Boston, on "Vocational Agricultural Education."

Various Notes.

light, but is by no means ready to drop Enchantress. White Enchantress and Beacon do particularly well with him.

Mr. Rosenthal, of the Boston Cut Flower Co., 14 Bromfield street, reports a heavy Christmas business. He keeps a thoroughly up-to-date store and his trade is steadily growing. He has recently made some large and tasteful funeral designs.

Dobbins & Shannon, of Woburn, and R. H. Little, of Winchester, are heavy shippers of high grade single violets to the Boston Coöperative Flower Market.

Thomas Pegler is headquarters for Freesia Purity at the Boston Flower Exchange and receives large daily shipments of them from S. J. Goddard, Willow Hill Greenhouses, H. Waldecker and R. D. Kimball, of Waban.

Everett E. Cummings, of Woburn, one of our leading violet specialists, handles some thousands of fine Princess of Wales flowers daily at the Boston Flower Exchange. He will discontinue growing winter vegetables after this season and will plant carnations and mums in their stead, using vegetables as a spring and summer succession.

Donald Carmichael, of Wellesley, has extra fine Carnation Conquest and mignonette at the Boston Coöperative Market.

Matthew F. Ruane, former salesman for Peirce Bros., but now operating a retail store at Waltham, reports business as decidedly good.

The Newtonville Greenhouses are shipping a fine lot of Killarney, White Killarney, Mrs. Jardine and Bon Silene roses to the Boston Flower Exchange.

The Flower Growers' Sales Co. reports business brisk. They are receiving a splendid lot of Cattleya Trianæ and gardenias from their growers. Carnations from F. P. Putnam and Halifax Gardens Co. are also of the top notch quality. Of roses they have large shipments.

Mann Bros. are cutting a fine lot of Formosa lilies. They also have quantities of Dutch hyacinths, tulips, including La Reine, and yellow daffodils in quantity.

Robert Hutcheon, of Stoughton, is a large shipper of Paper Whites at the Boston Coöperative Market, also a nice lot of carnations.

A splendid entertainment is prepared for ladies' night at the Gardeners' and Florists' Club January 23. The newly elected officers will be installed the same evening.

The Boston delegation to the Detroit convention was not so large as had been hoped for. The severely cold weather deterred some from making the trip.

Burgess & Cooney, of Maplewood, are shipping excellent mignonette, Trumpet Major and Paper Whites to the Boston Coöperative Market. Mrs. J. F. Flood, at the same market, sends fine daily shipments of Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri.

Welch Bros. find January business exceptionally good. In the way of choice flowers their cattleyas, gardenias, Beauties and valley are of top notch quality. They are just now getting good lots of Dutch bulbous flowers and fine freesia.

T. J. Grey Co. report a fine sale for seed of their new berried solanum. This has berries more pointed than Solanum Capsicastrum and is a good novelty.

The midwinter flower show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society will be held February 2, 3 and 4. There is a fine list of prizes for plants and cut flowers. Carnations have no less than twenty classes allotted to them.

R. C. Bridgham, who runs a high class retail store on Beacon street, as well as operating the Newtonville Greenhouses, had a splendid Christmas business and reports steady trade since. W. N. C.

Westboro, Mass.—W. M. Gardner, the High street florist, recently had the misfortune to fall and fracture a rib.

Fort Morgan, Colo.—L. J. Reid, of Reid's Greenhouses, makes a considerable part of his deliveries by means of a motorcycle and finds that it is handy, quick and economical for such a purpose. He says that though his business might not justify the expense of an automobile, the delivery department would be badly crippled at times without the motorcycle to help out the horse.

DETROIT.

The Market.

New Year's business was fair in Detroit this year and a good amount of stock was cleaned up. Roses were scarce and red roses were not to be had at any price. Red carnations were also scarce, but other colors were fairly plentiful in the carnation line. Violets we had in quantity and the call for these was not as great as anticipated. A great many were used, but the sale of this flower was disappointing. The business between Christmas and New Year's was fine, but stock of all kinds was scarce. Carnations during last week continued on the short side, but Easter lilies were to be had and met with a good call right along. Paper Whites and yellow narcissi were in heavy supply and had to be forced in order to move them out to the trade. Romans were in good demand; in fact, better than they have been for some time. Valley was rather scarce and some of it extremely poor.

On Thursday of last week carnations came in heavier and did not move out as the wholesalers would have liked them to and Saturday night found a few bunches left over. Monday morning, January 8, there was a good supply of dark carnations, with the light shades rather scarce. Roses were in good demand and the market cleaned up well in this line. Violets and valley also had a good call, owing to several large funerals in town. Lilies have shortened up and from the outlook will be short for some little time now. Single daffodils are off for a time, but will be back again with a heavy supply the latter part of this week. Yellow tulips are in the market and are fine, as also are the freesias. Greens of all kinds are selling well and stevia is still to be had.

Various Notes.

Robert Klagge is sending in some fine Rhea Reid and Mrs. Aaron Ward roses, also some fine single daffodils and freesias.

Chas. Plumb is in the market with single daffodils and tulips and will be heavy in this line right along.

Fred Breitmeyer is still cutting heavily on roses and also has some fine single violets.

Beard Bros. cut a nice lot of poinsettias for Christmas and are now sending in some good carnations and narcissi.

Hubert Pearce, of the Detroit Cut Flower Supply House, is exhibiting his new steam trap at the rose and carnation show this week.

"Sprinkleproof" Sam Seligman is with us again.

S. S. Skidelsky is in town.

Geo. Hampton, Jr., of the H. F. Michell Co., spent a few days with us last week.

A. Miller, of A. Henderson & Co., was in town for a week during the holidays and expected to return for the show this week. H. S.

Do You Sell Plants?

¶ You can sell twice as many if they are in Paper Pots.

¶ Jos. L. Briggs, Bridgehampton, N. Y., writes: "My customers refuse to buy plants of me unless they are in Paper Pots."

¶ And you can not only sell bedding plants and tomato and egg plants, but you can sell a hill of beans, or corn, or cucumbers. In fact, you can sell the whole garden if you have Paper Pots.

¶ MR. CARNATION GROWER, our 2½-inch Paper Pots are just what you want. They come flat, and 5000 of them go into a strawberry crate and you can make them up with little trouble. E. R. Tinette says, in Farm Journal: "An active boy or girl with a little practice could make up several thousand a day." They are square, there is no waste space, and cost 8½c per 100. The time saved in transplanting pays that, to say nothing of the finer plants you get.

Seven Pages of Retailers' Cards

This department for the cards of Leading Retail Florists — those florists who have the facilities for filling the orders sent them by other florists — has made possible the recent rapid development of this branch of the business, a branch of the trade now established for all time and so helpful that its volume will keep on increasing for many years.

Are you sending and receiving your share of these orders? You can send your share (and make 20 per cent profit without effort) if you let your customers know you can perform this service for them. To receive your share—well, The Review's department for Retailers' cards remains the one way of getting prompt action on the order in hand.

To be represented costs only 70 cents per week on a yearly order. This is for one-inch space. Other spaces in proportion.

Why not send your order today—now—before you forget it?

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The annual meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held on Thursday, December 28, with a good attendance.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, George Wittlinger; vice-president, Thomas A. Lee; secretary, E. W. Neubrand; treasurer, Chas. J. Weeks; corresponding secretary, George McIntosh.

Treasurer Weeks read the annual report, which showed that the society is in a prosperous condition.

Alex. Thompson, Arthur MacDonald and Robert Grieve were elected to active membership.

The prize offered by Abel Weeks was awarded to John Elliott for the best three vases of carnations. A rising vote of thanks was accorded to John Brunger, the retiring president. The committee appointed to make arrangements for the annual dinner reported that it will be held at the Florence hotel, January 17, at 7:30 p. m.

PITTSBURGH.

The Market.

The first week of the new year found many thankful florists, among the reasons being the following: That business turned out so well for the holidays, that flowers were not so scarce as this week, and that the weather was not nearly so bad as we have experienced since then. It commenced to get rough early last week and by Saturday morning the thermometer registered 6 degrees below zero.

Roses have shortened up since Christmas, until now there is not enough home production to nearly satisfy demands. Carnations and all other flowers were quite plentiful, however, so that there is not much cause for complaint.

The general retail business has been quiet since the first of the year, with the exception of a few of the large stores, which have been favored with some of the largest decorations of the season.

Various Notes.

Mrs. E. A. Williams had the elaborate decoration for the Darlington cotillion at the Pittsburgh Golf Club, Friday evening, January 5. This is an annual affair and is always one of the most elegant of the year, and this season it was finer than ever before.

Saturday evening, January 6, Randolph & McClements had the annual banquet at the Duquesne club. The decorations at this affair are always elaborate. This firm has been doing them for some years and has each year given something more novel than the previous year. The price is one that justifies, so they have been able to make it something to talk of the balance of the winter. Needless to say, this one was no exception.

There were quite a number of smaller social affairs, many given for the college boys and girls, all of which made a good week's business.

The Florists' Club met Tuesday evening, January 2, at the Fort Pitt hotel and while the attendance was smaller than usual, there was more than the usual amount of enthusiasm. The subject for the evening's discussion was "Roses," with only one small bunch down below zero, and transient trade was reported dull by the downtown florists. Quite a number of shipments came in frozen; nevertheless a lot of funeral work was made up. The wholesalers report that quite a lot of stock came in and, as the demand was light, prices came down a little.

Violets continue plentiful, with the price down to 60 cents per hundred for first quality. Roses, too, were more than the demand called for, Killarney running ahead of all others. There are also many nice consignments of Beauties.

Carnations have a good demand in all colors. Paper Whites and Romans continue plentiful and good cuts of valley and lilies are in evidence and sufficient for all demands.

INDIANAPOLIS.

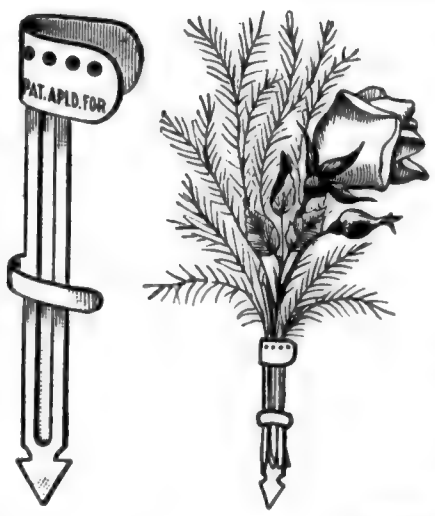
The Market.

Indianapolis is in the midst of the coldest spell that it has experienced in the last twenty-five years; the thermometer showed 16 degrees below zero Sunday morning, January 7, and the fireman is about the busiest man around the greenhouses these days. The recent cold weather has had a tendency to shorten the supply of cut flowers. However, trade has dropped off considerably since the holidays and there is plenty of stock to be had. Carnations have shortened to a large extent, the better grades bringing from $3 to $4 per hundred. Beauties have suffered from the recent cloudy weather, bringing from $1.50 to $6 per dozen. First-class Killarney and Richmond bring $10 to $12.50 per hundred, while Brides and Maids go at $8 to $10. Sweet peas are to be had, but not in quantity, while Paper Whites, Romans and jonquils are plentiful. Orchids, valley and violets are not in heavy demand.

Various Notes.

The annual meeting of the State Florists' Association is to be held at the Commercial club, Wednesday afternoon, January 17. The election of officers for the ensuing year and other business of importance will be before this meeting, which will be followed by a banquet at 6 p. m. The committee in charge of the entertainment has a number of surprises to offer and members are advised not to fail to attend.

Henry Bakemeyer, with A. Wiegand & Sons, spent several days in Chicago last week.



W. W. Coles, of Kokomo, dropped off in the city last week on his way to San Antonio, Tex.

Adolph Baur and Fred Dorner left Monday night to attend the convention in Detroit.

John Evans, of Richmond, spent a day in the city last week.

George Wiegand is contemplating a trip to Florida.

Baur & Steinkamp have been experiencing quite a little trouble with their water line, which froze up during the recent cold snap. In the construction of the boulevard in front of their place the dirt was nearly all removed from above the water main, which resulted in the pipe freezing. Baur & Steinkamp did not suffer any serious results, as a pump connected with a well took care of the boilers. H. L. W.

SEFTON FLORISTS' BOXES

CORRUGATED DESIGN STYLE AND FOLDING CUT FLOWER BOXES

Florists' success in shipping flowers depends to the greatest extent upon the point where their interest ceases in the sale of flowers. The progressive, prosperous florist retains his interest in a customer's order until it reaches destination, and for that reason he is careful to select the proper style and grade of box to insure safe delivery of his flowers.

Particular Florists are users of Sefton Corrugated Fibreboard Boxes for the shipment of Floral Designs as well as our superior line of Folding Cut Flower Boxes. They know from experience that Sefton Boxes combine high quality with low price and make neat, attractive packages which carry the flowers safely to destination. Write for our Flower Box Price List.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago; First VicePres., M. H. Duryea, New York City; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.

VISITED CHICAGO: A. B. Haven, representing Haven Seed Co., Santa Ana, Cal.

THERE was the usual quiet little gathering of seedsmen at Washington, Tuesday, January 9, to witness the opening of the bids on the government contract.

THE man who wants to contract 50,000 bushels of peas, 1912 crop, probably would have little trouble at next month's canners' convention at Rochester. But who wants to?

BEFORE the end of the month Ralph M. Ward & Co., New York, will remove to 71 Murray street, where the entire ninth floor will be occupied with quarters that will be up-to-date in every respect.

C. C. ABEL & Co., New York, well known importers and exporters of horticultural commodities, filed a petition in bankruptcy January 4. Liabilities, $55,237; nominal assets, $15,371.

J. W. JUNG, Randolph, Wis., says that seed corn is bound to be sold out long before the end of the season, owing to the unfavorable weather having caused farmers to neglect saving their own seed.

BELATED orders for Dutch bulbs still are being filled. The S. S. Potsdam, that reached New York January 3, from Rotterdam, brought five cases for Peter Henderson & Co. and six cases for Henry & Lee.

NOT all the pea growers have succumbed to the temptation of high prices and parted with stock seeds. Quite on the contrary, some of them are holding on to more stock than usual, to increase the 1912 acreage.

THE first catalogues mailed are bringing a not more than usually prompt response. The severe cold snap that was general all over the country right after the holidays has operated toward holding back the early birds.

H. F. MICHELL Co., Philadelphia, already has found its new buildings inadequate to its needs and has leased the four-story building adjoining its Ludlow street warehouses to give a necessary increase in warehouse facilities.

THERE are quite a few new people starting into the seed growing business and it is said they express surprise at the reluctance to intrust stock seed to them. Your up-to-date seedsman looks pretty closely into the qualifications of the men with whom he makes contracts these days.

PROBABLY it will take two or three full crop years to put the world's stock of seeds back to normal, but it certainly does look as though individual seedsmen were largely overcontracting their needs for 1913, undoubtedly with the idea of getting their wants filled even in the face of another year of short deliveries like the last.

THE grass seed business conducted by Henry Nungesser & Co., New York, has been taken over by a newly organized company known as the Nungesser-Dickinson Seed Co., and will be continued under that name. Henry Nungesser, for so many years identified with the grass seed business in this country and Europe, is president of the new company, and will assume charge of its affairs. Marshall revisions having also been issued in 1908 and 1910.

THE big mail-order seed houses have almost abandoned the big general magazines as a means of getting inquiries for catalogues. The January magazines carry scarcely any seed trade advertising and only a little is ordered for February.

LOS ANGELES SEED SITUATION.

All the seedsmen report business opening up well, though the dry December and the holidays checked the demand somewhat. Most of the seedsmen here handle nursery stock and advance orders for oranges are exceptionally good, according to C. Winsel.

Aggeler & Musser say their fall plantings were considerably delayed by drought, but opened up with a jump at the new year. This progressive firm notes a big increase in business and inquiries to date are largely in excess of previous years, especially for their specialties in peas and muskmelons.

The Germain Seed & Plant Co. has completely remodeled its store inside and out, and M. L. Germain, who has recently taken an active lead in the business, has systematized and improved the office end.

The West Coast Seed House has moved from its old location on Winston street to 116-118 East Seventh.

Theodore Payne and the Morris & Snow Seed Co. both report business good. Mr. Payne has bought out the lease and stock of John Chevaucher at Hollywood. H. R. R.

JAPANESE LILY BULBS.

Frank H. Henry, of Henry & Lee, New York, was in Chicago this week on his way home from Japan, where six months have been spent among the lily growers. Mr. Henry, who was accompanied by his wife and daughter, gives the following summary of crop conditions as they appeared to him on the day he sailed from Yokohama, December 12:

"The acreage of Formosas planted for the 1912 crop is thirty per cent less than was planted for the 1911 crop, and it is to be expected that prices will range from ten to fifteen per cent higher than during the last season. The Formosas are turning out better this season than heretofore, because of the bulbs being more thoroughly matured when shipped. I am convinced that a large part of the trouble the bulb forcers have with their stock is due to too early digging of the bulbs. Experience shows that not only is the loss greatly reduced by waiting until the bulbs are thoroughly matured before digging, but the late dug, well-matured bulbs can be brought into flower earlier than the green, early dug bulbs. Bulb forcers should not insist on early delivery; rather insist on having well-matured bulbs.

"The quality of the multiflorums has been considerably improved by the careful roguing of the stock; the Japanese are beginning to appreciate the importance of getting rid of the diseased and mixed types. The quantity planted for the next crop is a little smaller than

DREER'S FANCY LEAVED CALADIUMS

We are carrying the largest stock of Fancy Leaved Caladiums in the world in an assortment of varieties which, besides the choice standard sorts, includes many new and rare varieties not generally offered.

Bulbs started at any time before the middle of April will make splendid plants in 3½ or 4-inch pots, which will prove useful for porch and window boxes in shaded or semi-shaded positions and which always meet with ready sale, while for the decoration of the Florist's store window during the summer months no more useful subject can be grown.

We offer special selections according to variety as follows:

Choice Standard Varieties, $1.75 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Choice Rare and New Varieties, $2.25 per doz.; $15.00 per 100; $140.00 per 1000.
Choice Mixed Varieties, $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per 100.
Rare New Varieties, the most recent introductions, $3.50 per doz.; $25.00 per 100.
The above prices are for the trade only.

HENRY A. DREER 714 Chestnut St. Philadelphia, Pa.

usual, but prices are expected to stand with little change.

"The larger sizes of giganteums, say from 8-inch up, will be scarce next season and prices will be from twenty to twenty-five per cent higher. Greater care in growing is effecting some improvement in quality and the quantity planted is about the same as last year, but these are mostly the smaller sizes.

"The situation with regard to album and auratum is normal. The quantity planted of rubrum, Melpomene and magnificum is forty to fifty per cent short of normal and prices will inevitably be higher."

Mr. Henry left Robert Fulton at Yokohama, where he remained until January 9, on which date he sailed for San Francisco.

GLADIOLI IN HOLLAND.

Although hyacinths, tulips and daffodils take the first place in the bulb district, many other bulbous plants are also grown. Formerly only a few bulb growers cultivated such things as gladioli, anemones, chionodoxas, fritillarias, snowdrops, irises, ixias, sparaxis, muscari, ranunculus, scillas, etc., says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser (British), but as it is impossible to grow hyacinths, tulips or daffodils year after year on the same place, many growers make a change of crop by the cultivation of the bulbous plants mentioned above. Some growers also grow vegetables, and of these, potatoes, beans, cabbage and carrots give the best results. This year, especially, the crop of potatoes was remarkably fine, and in some places paid better than tulips. The culture of beans and peas improves the soil for the cultivation of bulbs. In most cases, however, bulb culture gives better results, as the demand for all kinds has risen remarkably.

The Dutch bulb growers call all bulbous plants, except hyacinths, tulips and daffodils, "bygoed," and of this the gladiolus forms a main part. Gladioli are divided into two large groups, early and late-flowering kinds. Of these, the early Dutch gladioli, to which Colvillei, nanus, ramosus, etc., belong, are well known all over the world, but just lately the late gladioli have received the greatest attention. At the meetings of the floral committee of the Dutch Bulb Growers' Society, held every fortnight during the summer, a large number of the most beautiful varieties were shown this season. Of course not all the varieties are of Dutch origin, but we have seen Dutch seedlings as good as the best of the foreign varieties. In support of the high quality of Dutch seedlings, may be noted that a grower at Overveen sold six bulbs of the variety Meteor for 1,000 guilders (or $400); also for the so-called spawn high prices have been paid.

In addition, Dutch bulb growers have extensive cultures of the best-known varieties, as America, Europa, Glory of Holland, etc. In the last year or two the culture of named kinds has in-

The "Spencer" Type of Sweet Peas

Burpee's Special Re-selected Stocks for 1912

"Spencer" Sweet Peas are a great specialty with us. We were the first to grow the seed in America—the stock having been entrusted to us before introduction, even in England, of the original Countess Spencer. We have grown "the original Beauty" and its many "sportive" children with painstaking care each season since. There are but few other growers—either in England or America—who can supply an equal assortment of True Re-selected "Spencers" that are uniformly of such choice quality. Seedsmen and planters generally can see how superior our stocks now are by the trials at Fordhook Farms next June or July, while those who may be in California are invited also to inspect the growing crops at our Floradale Farm in the beautiful Lompoc Valley. Every planter's garden, however, is really a trial ground and we shall be quite content if any "Doubting Thomas" will send us only a portion of his order and note the difference in character of flowers produced.

☞ You can buy so-called "Spencer" Sweet Peas at half our prices—but the result will be only disappointment, and when in flower you will surely admit that you would gladly have paid even double our prices to have had the Burpee Quality of the True Spencer Type.

DREER'S FANCY LEAVED CALADIUMS

We are carrying the largest stock of Fancy Leaved Caladiums in the world in an assortment of varieties which, besides the choice standard sorts, includes many new and rare varieties not generally offered.

Bulbs started at any time before the middle of April will make splendid plants in 3½ or 4-inch pots, which will prove useful for porch and window boxes in shaded or semi-shaded positions and which always meet with ready sale, while for the decoration of the Florist's store window during the summer months no more useful subject can be grown.

We offer special selections according to variety as follows:

Choice Standard Varieties, $1.75 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Choice Rare and New Varieties, $2.25 per doz.; $15.00 per 100; $140.00 per 1000.
Choice Mixed Varieties, $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per 100.
Rare New Varieties, the most recent introductions, $3.50 per doz.; $25.00 per 100.
The above prices are for the trade only.

HENRY A. DREER 714 Chestnut St. Philadelphia, Pa.

usual, but prices are expected to stand with little change.

"The larger sizes of giganteums, say from 8-inch up, will be scarce next season and prices will be from twenty to twenty-five per cent higher. Greater care in growing is effecting some improvement in quality and the quantity planted is about the same as last year, but these are mostly the smaller sizes.

"The situation with regard to album and auratum is normal. The quantity planted of rubrum, Melpomene and magnificum is forty to fifty per cent short of normal and prices will inevitably be higher."

Mr. Henry left Robert Fulton at Yokohama, where he remained until January 9, on which date he sailed for San Francisco.

GLADIOLI IN HOLLAND.

Although hyacinths, tulips and daffodils take the first place in the bulb district, many other bulbous plants are also grown. Formerly only a few bulb growers cultivated such things as gladioli, anemones, chionodoxas, fritillarias, snowdrops, irises, ixias, sparaxis, muscari, ranunculus, scillas, etc., says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser (British), but as it is impossible to grow hyacinths, tulips or daffodils year after year on the same place, many growers make a change of crop by the cultivation of the bulbous plants mentioned above. Some growers also grow vegetables, and of these, potatoes, beans, cabbage and carrots give the best results. This year, especially, the crop of potatoes was remarkably fine, and in some places paid better than tulips. The culture of beans and peas improves the soil for the cultivation of bulbs. In most cases, however, bulb culture gives better results, as the demand for all kinds has risen remarkably.

The Dutch bulb growers call all bulbous plants, except hyacinths, tulips and daffodils, "hygoed," and of this the gladiolus forms a main part. Gladioli are divided into two large groups, early and late-flowering kinds. Of these, the early Dutch gladioli, to which Colvillei, nanus, ramosus, etc., belong, are well known all over the world, but just lately the late gladioli have received the greatest attention. At the meetings of the floral committee of the Dutch Bulb Growers' Society, held every fortnight during the summer, a large number of the most beautiful varieties were shown this season. Of course not all the varieties are of Dutch origin, but we have seen Dutch seedlings as good as the best of the foreign varieties. In support of the high quality of Dutch seedlings, may be noted that a grower at Overveen sold six bulbs of the variety Meteor for 1,000 guilders (or $400); also for the so-called spawn high prices have been paid.

In addition, Dutch bulb growers have extensive cultures of the best-known varieties, as America, Europa, Glory of Holland, etc. In the last year or two the culture of named kinds has in-

The "Spencer" Type of Sweet Peas

Burpee's Special Re-selected Stocks for 1912

"Spencer" Sweet Peas are a great specialty with us. We were the first to grow the seed in America—the stock having been entrusted to us before introduction, even in England, of the original Countess Spencer. We have grown "the original Beauty" and its many "sportive" children with painstaking care each season since. There are but few other growers—either in England or America—who can supply an equal assortment of True Re-selected "Spencers" that are uniformly of such choice quality. Seedsmen and planters generally can see how superior our stocks now are by the trials at Fordhook Farms next June or July, while those who may be in California are invited also to inspect the growing crops at our Floradale Farm in the beautiful Lompoc Valley. Every planter's garden, however, is really a trial ground and we shall be quite content if any "Doubting Thomas" will send us only a portion of his order and note the difference in character of flowers produced.

☞ You can buy so-called "Spencer" Sweet Peas at half our prices—but the result will be only disappointment, and when in flower you will surely admit that you would gladly have paid even double our prices to have had the Burpee Quality of the True Spencer Type.

Try GOLDEN QUEEN and PRESIDENT TAFT for forcing.

One customer writes under date of May 25th: —

"The Golden Queen that I ordered from you were planted in a carnation house on February 7th, and we are now getting fine spikes and handsome flowers. I find your variety to be one week earlier than Mrs. Francis King, ten days earlier than Augusta and two weeks ahead of America. They have been perfectly satisfactory in every way."

PROVIDENCE.

The Market.

The first week of the new year did not round out so large a volume of business as had been anticipated, but as a whole was fairly satisfactory. Funeral work was the chief factor, but a few small social functions assisted. The week opened with a rush on account of the inauguration of the officers in five of the cities of the state, followed the next day with the state inauguration. The supplying of baskets, bouquets and other pieces, however, was so generally distributed that everybody got a fair share.

The supply of all kinds of cut flowers is now equal to the demand and the appearance of daffodils, hyacinths and other bulb stock has eased the market on carnations and roses and afforded a larger variety. Prices hold about normal. Thursday night, January 4, a high wind began, accompanied by exceedingly cold weather, which has since continued, the zero mark being hung out in most places hereabouts.

Always mention the Florists' Review when writing advertisers.

The other day the writer was unceremoniously racked over the coals by a florist who complained of the price he paid us for a case of Paper Whites. He said he had bought a case of 1250 bulbs from a Dutchman for $8.70 for the case. Produced the order blank and had an invoice, both reading $8.70 for the case. For a while the air was dense, but after things simmered down a bit, and the matter was investigated, we found the Dutchman had drawn advance charges on the freight bill of $4.00 on the case, and 75c for freight and cartage, making the actual cost of the box over $13.00. The good old Scotchman had forgotten all about his freight bill—and many others do, too. Every florist should look over his freight bills carefully; see that his goods are not over-weighed, and that there are no advance charges against him. This "watering" of freight bills is not uncommon, and much profit is made by foreigners on rebates from this source. When comparing prices, always add your freight charges to your invoice costs, if you want to know the real cost—that's only fair to yourself. This "advance charge" racket is very misleading, and in many cases nothing more than pure and simple swindling. Look at your freight bills. Figure it all up, and then send for the Horseshoe Brand catalogue, with prices f. o. b. cars New York.

LILIUM HARRISII

LET US SUPPLY YOUR WANTS IN LILIES THIS SEASON

We think we can make it to your advantage to do so, as regards both quality and price.

The stock that we offer is not gathered indiscriminately from all kinds of sources, but is grown for us by a few selected growers whose stocks have been worked up from the true, original stock. In order to insure the health of the product, the bulbs are not grown on the same field oftener than one season, other crops being grown on the field the preceding year. The ground is thoroughly manured when the previous crop is grown, leaving it in a high state of cultivation, and when the lily bulbs are planted no fresh manure is used; this prevents disease and insures a crop of strong, healthy bulbs.

In addition to this, we do not dig our bulbs as early as they are usually dug, but leave them in the ground until they are thoroughly ripened and matured. When Harrisii is good it leaves little to be desired. There is very little, if any, stock obtainable as good as the stock that we are offering. We are supplying only this one grade of selected stock and when this is disposed of we shall have no more to offer.

While the quality of the stock that we offer is of the highest, our prices are as low as, or lower than, the prices of those who offer the ordinary stock gathered from indiscriminate sources. We are sure buyers will find our stock very satisfactory, and much more so than the Japan-grown Longiflorum, which has badly deteriorated in recent years.

Bear in mind that we were the original introducers of Harrisii in Bermuda, and that we have exceptional facilities for obtaining our present supplies. Also take note that the smallest bulbs that we offer are 6-7 inch bulbs, not 5-7 inch, as usually offered.

6- 7 inch bulbs,	335 to the case,	$15.00 per case;	full thousand lots, $ 40.00 per 1000
7- 9 inch bulbs,	200 to the case,	16.00 per case;	full thousand lots, 75.00 per 1000
9-11 inch bulbs,	100 to the case,	18.00 per case;	full thousand lots, 175.00 per 1000

FERNS

We have an exceptionally nice lot of ferns in the following varieties—good, bushy, well-grown plants that will please the most critical buyers. Plants have been grown in pots and are thoroughly well established and nicely finished.

Nephrolepis Bostoniensis and Piersoni, 6-inch pots	$0.50 each
Nephrolepis Elegantissima, Piersoni, Bostoniensis and Harrisii, heavy 8-inch plants	$1.00 to 1.50 each
Nephrolepis Elegantissima, Bostoniensis and Harrisii, heavy 10-inch plants	2.50 each

Michael O'Connor, employed by Thomas Galvin at Newport, had a narrow escape a few days ago. He fell into a well twenty-four feet deep, which contained more than enough water to drown a man. He was drawing water, when his foot slipped, and as he went down his head hit against the stones on the side of the well, so that he was partly stunned when he struck the water. Other workmen saw him disappear and one of the men went down in the bucket and brought O'Connor up. W. H. M.

ALBANY, N. Y.

The annual election of officers of the Albany Florists' Club Thursday evening, January 4, brought out a representative crowd that took a lively interest in the proceedings. Fred A. Danker was reëlected president; John A. Murnane, Jr., elected vice-president; Robert Davidson, reëlected secretary; Patrick Hyde reëlected treasurer; trustees, Fred Goldring, Fred Henkes, Frank A. Briare. Both the president and secretary returned thanks for the honor shown and predicted big things in the year ahead with the help of the club, which was reported in a satisfactory condition, with a membership of 150. Patrick Hyde, the treasurer, was unable to be present, owing to the death of a brother.

Among the visitors were R. J. Irwin, Walter Mott and Walter A. Cook, the latter being elected a member during the evening. Refreshments were indulged in and tongues unloosed, making the evening pass pleasantly and profitably. The severe cold snap prevented some of the out-of-town members attending, the thermometer at the time of meeting registering 16 degrees below zero. M.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Officers for 1911-12: Pres., J. H. Dayton, Painesville, O.; Vice-pres., W. H. Wyman, North Abington, Mass.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-seventh annual meeting, Boston June 1912.

A NEW building is being erected at Fairmount, Minn., by the McKisson Nurseries. It will be used as an office and for tree grafting.

ORNAMENTAL nursery stock will not be in oversupply in this country for many years to come, no matter what fate may overtake peach and apple trees.

THE nursery business has been at a standstill thus far in 1912, even the industrious and gentlemanly agents frozen up practically all over the country.

F. G. YULE has disposed of his interests in C. S. Harrison's Select Nursery Co., of York, Neb., and will start in the nursery business at Lincoln, Neb., on his own account. Mr. Yule will handle mainly ornamentals, shrubbery and perennials.

TENNESSEE NURSERYMEN.

EVENING SESSION, 7:30 O'CLOCK.

Delegate's report of the American Apple Congress, Denver, Colo., November 14, 15, 16, 1911, Henry R. Howard, Chattanooga.

The present officers of the State Nurserymen's Association are as follows: President, A. J. Fletcher, Cleveland; vice-president, Henry M. Camp, Jr., Winchester; secretary-treasurer, J. M. Bentley, State University, Knoxville. Sectional vice-presidents—East Tennessee, A. I. Smith, Knoxville; Middle Tennessee, Charles R. Givan, Murfreesboro; West Tennessee, J. H. Boyd, Memphis.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

The year 1912 opens with every prospect of good business, unless conditions generally in all lines throughout the country get worse than they have been for the last year. The 1911 flower business of Washington was considerably better than in 1910, as a general thing. Of course, there were probably exceptions to the rule. There is an optimistic feeling that there will be a healthy growth this year.

All of the downtown florists report their 1911 business as greater than in the year before. One concern did $26,000 more business last year than in 1910. Others approximated that figure, while some exceeded it. There is plenty of competition, and room in the business for still more, according to good judges. Every new entry in the field takes business from the older firms, but the latter continue to extend their trade. More flowers are being sold than ever before, and the prices are said to be much lower, on the whole, than they were a few years ago. At that time the prevailing retail prices of good roses ranged around $6 to $9 per dozen. Now, it is said, the usual price is more likely to be $3 or $4 a dozen for a better grade of flowers. More people are using flowers, people in moderate circumstances having acquired the flower habit. Big orders are scarcer, perhaps, but the small buyer is ever in evidence and all dealers are glad to get 50-cent and $1 orders.

The present cold snap is viewed differently by various florists. Near-zero weather is not good for the greenhouse men. It keeps up prices for the retailers, but some of them say that benefit is more than offset by the drop in trade, owing to the difficulty people have in getting around. Stock is generally scarce, but what there is available seems good, including carnations, Killarneys and other roses, sweet peas, violets, and lilies of several kinds.

Various Notes.

The charity ball given at the Willard Monday night, January 8, afforded Small & Sons an opportunity to decorate the big ball room, toward which they donated a quantity of smilax, palms, red ribbons, 250 boutonnieres for the dancers and a big bouquet for the lady leader of the cotillion. The Smalls will remain in their old quarters, at Fourteenth and G streets, until they can rent the store or sell the building, which belongs to the estate of the elder Small. The upper floors of the building are already rented to one of the government bureaus. Meanwhile the Smalls are doing business also at their new stand, at Fifteenth and H streets.

The city block on which are now located, in addition to the Small store, the establishments of Z. D. Blackistone and W. Marche, may be invaded in a year or so by the Washington Florists Co., which will be required to move from its present location, at Thirteenth and F streets, owing to the fact that the building has been sold and will be remodeled. Manager Bauer says it is uncertain when the Washington Florists Co. will move, or where. Rumor says it will not be long before the firm is located in the new business section just mentioned.

George C. Shaffer, Fourteenth and I streets, recently purchased a second automobile delivery wagon, a big gasoline machine, artistically painted in green and gold.

The Washington Florists' Society held its regularly monthly meeting last week, at which H. A. Huston, representative of the German Potash Syndicate, delivered a lecture on potash as a plant food and advocated its extended use, in connection with phosphoric acid, in greenhouses, for potted plants, in outdoor flower beds, vegetable gardens, and on lawns. A committee of the society, consisting of N. L. Hammer, Otto Bauer and O. A. C. Oehmler, has arranged for a series of lectures, to be delivered monthly before the society until next July. The next one, in February, will be on the subject of "Injurious Insects and How to Treat Them."

Manager Albert Schnell, of the Washington Florists' Exchange, continues to recover from the attack of blood poisoning from which he has been suffering.

Trade visitors here recently included R. Shoch, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia.

The Pennock-Meehan Co. is showing some fine Easter lilies, Lilium auratum and Japanese pink tiger lilies, as well as Golden Spur jonquils and some of the first white and yellow tulips that have appeared upon the market.

AMERICAN PILLAR

HAS HOSTS OF FRIENDS

Tenants Harbor, Me., 2-3-11.—Gentlemen: Many thanks for your beautiful catalog. I want to tell you that I have one American Pillar which I have had for four years. It grows beautifully in this climate (way down on the coast of Maine) and is very much admired by everyone who sees it. Very truly yours.—Mrs. J. H. D———.

New Castle, Del., 11-12-1910.—Gentlemen: The American Pillar Rose you sent me is the finest of them all, and I have some ten different varieties. It was covered with thousands of blossoms, and the original plant covers an arch over ten feet high, and ten or twelve feet long. I have many Roses, but the American Pillar is the most admired of them all. I never find any trouble with mildew or insects. Your Roses are better than you claim and I am a most enthusiastic believer in Conard & Jones Company. Very sincerely.—Mrs. Selden S. Deemer.

Comment from the London Garden.—"A most notable feature in this glorious display (Temple Flower Show in London) was the New 'American Pillar' Rose. The large and attractive rich rose pink blooms are produced in immense clusters, the white centers of the blooms adding to their attractiveness.—Florists' Exchange."

The best pink rambler is American Pillar; it is an extraordinary grower, its foliage is darker in color than any other, and it is more evergreen than any known kind. It produces immense clusters of large flowers from 1½ to 2½ inches in diameter. This variety created quite a sensation when shown by us last year; it has been awarded the R. H. S. Award of Merit.—Hobbies, Limited, London, England.

"The Rose is of too recent introduction to write otherwise than generally about it. Its strong points appear to be its fine growth, lateness and showy flowers, and its really magnificent foliage, which clothes the stem down to the base, the pillars looking in Autumn as though clothed with ivy rather than a Rose foliage. Its special uses are as a tall pillar or rambling over a pergola, arch or screen."—From 1911 Rose Annual of the National Rose Society.

PRICES—Strong 3 year (4 to 5 ft.), $35.00 per 100; 2 year (3 to 4 ft.), $25.00 per 100; plants from pots, hardened, 2½-inch, $10.00 per 100; f. o. b. West Grove.

PACIFIC COAST.

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

C. H. McIsaac, of the Lilydale Gardens, is this season raising a large quantity of callas from seed.

R. B. Morris has started in the calla bulb industry. He has three acres planted to bulbs and is preparing to increase his plantings to a total of eight acres.

This section was favored with some good rains during holiday week, but the total for the season is still considerably below normal.

Florists Thomas Thompson and W. E. King both report an excellent holiday trade. Both sold out clean and could have sold more had stock been available. There was a notable increase in the call for plants.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

Business is again back to normal. Demand for stock New Year's day was brisk, but nothing like the Christmas trade. With the closing of the year's business, everyone expresses satisfaction with the results; the depressed trade condition in other lines had little effect on the flower business, the best evidence being the extensive building that was done in the last year.

Roses and carnations are about equal to demand, while hyacinths, narcissi and daffodils, the harbingers of spring, lend variety to the stock. Cattleyas, violets and valley are scarce, but Easter lilies and callas can be had in limited quantities.

The continuous cloudy and snowy weather is detrimental to the stock, and impairs the keeping qualities, yet there is a deficiency in rainfall of several inches.

Various Notes.

Zimmerman Bros. have purchased a tract of land near Tigard and will erect a range of glass there this summer.

E. R. C.

SEATTLE, WASH.

The Market.

Business following Christmas and for New Year's day was quite good, several large decorations and some important funerals having helped considerably. There has been a shortage of carnations, the demand constantly being in excess of supply, but the brighter weather of the last few days will have a tendency to improve this important crop in quantity and quality.

The finish of the chrysanthemum season is in sight, few blooms now being on sale. Violets have been the best sellers this year, large quantities meeting a brisk sale. Roses and valley are none too plentiful. Paper Whites and Romans so far are the only spring bulbs offered. Some fine azaleas are now on sale, and there is good business right along in cyclamens, ferns, etc.

Various Notes.

The Burns Floral Co. recently shipped several funeral designs to Alaska.

The King County Granges are working in the interests of a fair in Seattle this fall. With a carnival, two flower shows and a fair scheduled for this year, it looks as if 1912 would be a busy one.

The reason the Seattle bowlers waited until after the holidays to meet Tacoma was to give Tacoma a chance to practice.

T. W.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Market.

The weather has turned from light showers, which we are yet much in need of, to bright, sunshiny days and sharp, frosty nights. These conditions make stock of all kinds rather scarce, and the higher prices which have prevailed since the middle of last month are bound to continue until we have a moderation of temperature. Business is hardly up to that of one year ago. Although some of the retailers report a heavy New Year trade, a majority are in favor of declaring that it was not as good as was expected. From all sides, however, the accounts of business done Christmas week are highly satisfactory and put a good finish on the year 1911, which from many standpoints could be called an "off" year.

The recent cold snap has made violets and outside narcissi scarce. These represent about everything that is grown outside at this time, although there are still a few late blooming mums to be seen. Good roses are scarce; in fact, there is no really fancy stock to be had. With carnations there is more latitude and both stems and blossoms are right. Valley and orchids are as usual, and daffodils and freesias help nicely in letting us know that spring will be here shortly. Romans are plentiful and cheap. All sorts of green goods are in fair demand, but adiantum and asparagus are showing the effect of the heavy holiday cutting, and the same can be said of smilax.

Robert Armstrong, well known to the Pacific coast trade, has taken charge of the grounds of the East Lawn Nursery & Development Co., of Sacramento, Cal.

TACOMA, WASH.

The Market.

The last week of 1911 was a busy one, the finish of perhaps the best all-around year the florists have ever known in this part of the country. While stock may have sold for better prices in former years, we doubt if the trade in all its branches has ever experienced a better year than 1911, and everyone seems to think we have even better things to expect in the future.

Stock has been far short of the demand and, with two or three funerals, the retailers were up against a real shortage.

Bulbous stock is becoming more plentiful and some lilies have made their appearance in the stores. Carnations of the better grade are still scarce, but the bright days of the last week are helping to bring the crop along and the next few weeks will no doubt see the supply up to the demand.

Various Notes.

The Northwestern Floral Co. is doing quite a business in the nursery line. The stock is shipped from the company's nursery at Portland.

Mr. Smith, of the Smith Floral Co., reports the Christmas trade in the new store even better than he had expected.

Van Slyke & Seamons have a fine house of Formosa lilies just ready to cut. This lily has proven a paying proposition with them.

H. W. Manike reports great success with growing the Gov. Herrick violet. This violet seems especially adapted to this climate.

LOS ANGELES.

The Market.

Not for a long time has there been such a scarcity of good outdoor flowers, especially carnations, as during the first week in the new year. A few degrees of frost in several localities where these flowers are grown ruined the cut for a few days, while other growers, more fortunately situated, reaped the benefit of higher prices. In addition to the shortage of outdoor flowers, the greenhouse crops for a few days also failed and the unusual spectacle of high-priced carnations in Los Angeles was seen. In one instance a retailer was seen to pay not less than $1 per dozen for good indoor reds. To make matters worse, a scarcity of violets developed and good violets were out of the question. Indoor roses, on the other hand, have become more plentiful and fine cuts of Killarney, Richmond, Radiance and other popular varieties are being sent in and come in useful for good funeral work and decorations. For filling in, stocks and sweet sultan are the most popular and plentiful, these flowers being available practically all the year around. Orchids were probably never more plentiful at this time of year and the demand has been good, but why growers will persist in cutting the flowers before they are half developed is difficult to explain. There are still a few mums to be had, but their glory has departed. Lily of the valley has been arriving in better shape and there is plenty of it to meet all demands. Greens of all kinds are plentiful and good and plants are not much in demand.

Various Notes.

O. C. Saakes has been busy with club and dinner decorations and his New Year business eclipsed all former records. He has been handling a fine lot of pot spiræas and Whitmani ferns, which sell rapidly.

The staff at the Freeman-Lewis place, on Fourth street, has been kept on the jump with decorations. At the Baker wedding at the Woman's Club a fine effect was created by the use of great quantities of greens and Killarney roses. This firm has one of the best windows in town to show off stock, and it is always a credit to those in charge.

It is reported that Herbert Wolfskill is quitting the florists' business. He and his brother, William L., have been in partnership since 1909, under the style of Thee Florists, at Fifth and Hill streets, where a profitable and high-class business has been done. Now the brothers have sold their interests to Frank, who will carry on the business as heretofore. All will wish him continued success. Herbert Wolfskill has been suffering more or less from rheumatism for some time, which is one reason for his decision to leave the flower business, and he contemplates a thorough rest for at least six months.

Albert Knopf's many friends in the east will be glad to hear that he has struck a good thing in purchasing the Redondo Floral Co. Since going there last May he has had hardly a dull minute, while at holidays and times of special stress he and his staff simply have to live at the store.

A. F. Borden, on West Third street, says that the year opened with a rush. At the grand opening of the Loyal Order of Moose, January 1 and 2, Mr. Borden furnished the decorations, and the large lodge room, 100 x 100 feet, at Levy's cafe, certainly looked fine, with large kentias, azaleas and other plants and big bunches of American Beauties. At the greenhouses the carnations, under the care of J. S. Dekema, never looked better. White and pink Enchantress are the principal kinds grown.

At the Angelus Flower Shop there is always something new and different from what is seen elsewhere and this is where J. W. Walters wins out over some of his slower competitors. Just now he is featuring heather, and large bunches of the beautiful Erica melanthera have a fine appearance in the store. At a recent dinner at the country club this and Beauty roses were used with fine effect.

When taking his seat at the Elks' New Year's banquet, Morris Goldenson was pleasantly surprised to find that his table had been finely decorated by his store clerks. A centerpiece of American Beauties and corsages of orchids for the ladies were parts of the scheme. George Watson, of Boyle Heights, and his daughter were included in the party.

A. & H. Abercromby sold a big lot of Boston and Whitmani ferns around the holidays, which depleted their stock somewhat, but they still have a fine show of these and other plants. They handle about 50,000 Whitmani every year, besides cyclamens, begonias and other stock, and have a promising looking nephrolepis sport with finer foliage than that of N. Amerpohlii.

Manager W. Wern, of Wright's Flower Shop, says that the year just closed was the banner year since the firm has been in existence and that indications are for even better things in 1912. The stock at the greenhouses at Gardena is in fine shape throughout the 100,000 feet of space which this plant comprises.

At the Los Angeles Flower Market business keeps up remarkably well. The prices obtained are good and the stock

Vegetable Forcing.

FORCING TOMATOES.

I have been growing tomatoes in the greenhouse for the last two years, with only fair success. This year I should like to have a banner crop and so I write for information about growing them. The varieties have been Globe and Comet, and this year I shall try a few Bonny Best in addition to the others. I have been transplanting from the seed bed into pots, 2-inch to 4-inch in size, using fertilizer in the soil at each move, and then into the permanent bed. How far apart should the rows be and how far apart should the plants be in the row? Do you use fertilizer when you set them in the final bed? If so, what do you use and how often? Do you cultivate them after they are put in the permanent bed? How do you pollenize them, and is it necessary to pollenize after the ventilators and side sashes are kept open? Do you spray with Bordeaux as a precautionary measure or wait until you see the need of it? C. L. H.

Use carefully prepared, fresh Bordeaux as a preventive. It is too late to do much good after the crop is attacked by fungous diseases. The germs of the disease light on top of the leaves and cannot germinate where the leaves are coated with Bordeaux.

Your varieties are all right. The distance will depend somewhat on the arrangement of the house, etc. I like to plant fifteen inches apart for single-stem plants and have the rows in solid beds three feet apart. If on raised beds four to five feet wide, get two rows in a bench. Some growers plant eighteen inches apart each way. Spade some rotted manure into the beds before planting and feed occasionally, after they get to bearing, with commercial fertilizers and liquid manure. I think that after they commence to bloom you will find that you can fertilize all blooms by shaking each stalk carefully by giving it a sharp tap every day about noon, using a light stick with a soft rag tied around it near the end, so as not to bruise the stalk. Give several quick, sharp taps on the stalk, near the blooms. It can be done quickly and, if it is properly done each day, no blooms will be lost in good weather. H. G.

Lawrence, Mass.—A. H. Wagland, known also in the local trade as Wagland the Florist, finds that his five greenhouses, which cover all his available space at 647 Broadway, are much too small to supply the needed stock, and he is therefore planning to begin the erection of a range of greenhouses on his farm, about a mile distant from his present location. He also contemplates opening a store on the main street of the city. His new delivery automobile, which has been in use about two months, is proving to be a good acquisition. Master Harry Wagland has full charge of the delivery. This business was started nine years ago, with one greenhouse, and has had a steady, substantial growth.

Special Strain of Golden Self-Blanching CELERY

We offer an exceptionally fine strain known as our Perfection Strain. This seed is crop 1910; has been thoroughly tried out and we know it is right. It is almost free from green sorts, and more than one customer has told us they did not find a hollow stalk in the field this year. The germination is perfect. We consider it Perfection in every respect and do not think it can be improved on.

The Market.

Christmas trade this year exceeded the expectations of the florists. With the price of cotton, which is the main issue in this "neck of the woods," at about one-half of what it was last year, and with a whole week of disagreeable, stormy weather, a dull season was naturally expected, but in the final wind-up surprises were many. Everything in the pot plant line was eagerly bought up and at better prices than formerly. Azaleas brought from $1.50 to $5; Roman hyacinths in pans, 12½ cents per bulb; poinsettias, $1 to $2.50 per pan. Glory of Cincinnati brought $1 to $1.50 and more of them could have been sold. Cyclamens were $1 to $2.50 each. Made-up baskets sold much better than ever and at highly satisfactory prices.

In cut flowers American Beauties had the call at $15 per dozen; Richmonds were $4; other varieties of roses, $3. Carnations were $2.50 per dozen for pink and white and $3 for red. Orchids readily brought $2 per flower. As usual, in the hurry and bustle, some funeral work was called for. Holly, on account of the woeful lack of berries, did not meet with general favor. However, take it all in all, it was a most satisfactory Christmas to the florists, but not to the general city trade.

Various Notes.

H. L. Von Trott, of the Morning View Greenhouses, reports a ten per cent increase at Christmas and is satisfied as to the amount of business done.

W. B. Paterson, of the Rosemont Gardens, reports an increase of ten per cent. He had a considerable quantity of orchids in stock and they were sold quickly at good prices. His new delivery wagon is certainly a beauty and has been the subject of many favorable comments. W. C. C.

LOS ANGELES NOTES.

cleans up well. C. Morton expects to handle about 650,000 daffodils this year.

H. Reeve Darling is genuinely pleased with business conditions generally and has had a wonderful run of trade at the Hayward Floral Co.'s store. A good deal of credit is due to Bert Bateman, his capable and artistic designer.

The usual monthly meeting of the Los Angeles County Horticultural Society was held January 2. The principal business was the election of officers, which resulted as follows: Theodore Payne, president; E. R. Reese, vice-president; Chas. Winsel, treasurer, and H. W. Kruckeberg, secretary. There was a paper and considerable discussion on "Landscape Gardening in California," and the park commission came in for some rather hard knocks. A publicity committee was named by the president, consisting of Henry W. Kruckeberg, H. R. Richards and P. D. Barnhart.

The H. N. Gage Co. was fortunate in not having the carnations frozen, the grounds at Hollywood being in the frostless belt. This firm has contracted for the cut of roses from Speakman Bros.' new place at Lawndale, and fine Killarneys, of good size, stem and color, are arriving. A large and varied line of florists' supplies is carried here.

Dieterich & Turner's new house, 50 x 300 feet, is now finished at Montebello, and another rose house, 60 x 300 feet, is to be built this spring, the glass being already on the ground. A large cement oil tank, to hold 500 barrels of crude oil, is being built on high ground, so that the oil will feed the boilers by gravity, without pumping. Another large piece of ground has been purchased and a range of plant houses is among the possibilities here. The progress made by this firm is remarkable and everything done is carried out on up-to-date commercial lines.

J. N. Grant is making a tour of Arizona with the Grant planting pot, a paper pot specially designed for the growth of young stock of palms, eucalyptus and other plants that are propagated in large numbers. The pot is already in use by the government forest service and is similar to the bamboo pots used in India's forest service, with which Mr. Grant was formerly connected.

H. R. R.

Hoopeston, Ill.—Andrew Peterson, who conducts a large range of greenhouses here, has also bought the greenhouses at Gibson, Ill., paying for them something over $16,000. He formerly owned greenhouses in Paxton.

ROCHESTER.

The Market.

Severely cold weather holds our city in its grip, but business seems brisk and the zero temperature does not interfere with the sale of flowers. There are quite a few weddings booked for January, which will keep us busy.

Killarneys, both pink and white, are good and are much reduced in price. Tafts are splendid. Wards are much more abundant. Richmonds are rather poor. Beauties are not as good as they have been. Harrisii lilies are scarce just at present. A few speciosum and auratum lilies are seen here and there. All carnations are good; the red ones are becoming less numerous. Cattleyas are selling better than ever and are in finer condition than they have been at any time this winter. Valley is good, but somewhat scarce. Plants of all kinds are in demand and azaleas are arriving in great numbers now.

Various Notes.

R. Karlstrom, of W. A. Manda, Inc., South Orange, N. J., called on the trade in this city.

The Ellwanger-Rose wedding, which took place January 4, was one of the most brilliant affairs of the season. Enormous quantities of wild smilax and Easter lilies were used. J. B. Keller Sons did the work.

Geo. B. Hart and Wm. L. Keller expected to go to the rose show in Detroit.

Seymour S. Potter, aged 53, dropped dead while delivering a funeral piece at 142 Rohr street, January 5. His death was due to heart failure.

J. B. Keller Sons' new boiler is working in great shape in this zero weather, which puts it to a severe test. They are much pleased with it. E. C. A.

W. W. Hathaway reports Christmas trade as ahead of any previous year. Cut flowers were more in demand than a year ago, while the plant trade was not quite so good. Both plants and cut flowers were of better quality than usual. Bright colors took the lead and were unequal to the demand. In pot plants there was a good call for azaleas, Lorraine and Glory of Cincinnati begonias, ardisias, cyclamens, primulas and poinsettias. Holly, laurel and boxwood sold on sight and were of extra fine quality, with the exception of holly, which was well berried but not so green as usual. C.

THE NEW YELLOW FORCING ROSE SUNBURST

This magnificent, giant yellow rose has been tested for three years in our benches; it stands head and shoulders above all other sorts of its color and will rank with American Beauty and the Killarneys in value and grandeur—because

It has a long, pointed bud, which can be cut tight for market. It is pre-eminently a long-stemmed rose. The stem is always stiff. It is free in bottom breaks. Is extraordinarily vigorous and healthy. Belongs in the class of Big Roses. Its keeping qualities rank with the best. Buds shipped from Richmond last December opened up perfectly in both Philadelphia and New York, where it scored 90 before the Florists' Club.

The color is orange-copper or golden orange and golden yellow, all intense shades, extremely brilliant in effect.

Come and see it growing; we have 8,000 of it benched.

Does splendidly out of doors; will rank high as a bedder. At the Chicago show, 1910, it was awarded the silver cup for the best new rose never before exhibited, and the judges unanimously gave it honorable mention additional. Has created a sensation wherever shown.

Raised by M. Pernet-Ducher, from whom we bought the American rights.

We have divided our stock with Mr. C. H. Totty, of Madison, N. J., to give eastern growers a chance to see it growing. Will be distributed March 1 in America by C. H. Totty and The E. G. Hill Co. Mr. Pernet will distribute same date in Europe.

The American price is $30.00 per 100; $250.00 per 1000 (own roots); $5.00 per 100 additional for grafts

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

New Year's day was one of the gloomiest we have had in many a year, but nevertheless the business was above expectations, both in the sale of plants and cut flowers; the latter being put up in hundreds of boxes New Year's eve at the different flower stores for early morning delivery. We are now at the height of the social and the beginning of the carnival season, which was ushered in by its first ball, January 5. Every storekeeper was delighted with the business of the first week in the new year, because the various social functions, as well as the funerals of two prominent men, helped to clean up nearly all of the incoming stock, which is of exceptionally good grade.

Roman hyacinths and Paper White narcissi grown by local florists are coming in handy at present, when all outdoor grown flowers are practically gone. Home grown sweet peas are scarce, being raised outside and therefore subjected to the inclemency of the weather; and if the approaching cold wave strikes us good and hard it will put an end to this valuable flower.

Various Notes.

U. J. Virgin's azaleas created a sensation on New Year's eve and were sold out at the highest figures.

J. C. Quinette reported a fine holiday trade and is booking heavy orders for fruit and ornamental trees and shrubbery.

F. A. Quinette is doing well at his new store on Baronne street, handling chiefly outdoor nursery stock. R. E.

SPRINGFIELD, O.

Club Meeting.

The prevailing blizzard and numerous counter attractions occasioned a reduced attendance at the meeting of the Springfield Florists' Club, held on Monday evening, January 8, in the directors' room of the American Trust and Savings Bank.

The reading of the paper prepared for this meeting was postponed until the time for the February meeting, at which a sauerkraut supper in one of the greenhouse sheds will serve as the sort of attraction which invariably acts as a "puller."

Charles W. Schmidt and Clinton L. Reese were appointed a committee to confer with the various florists in regard to an exhibit in connection with the corn show to be held January 16 to 20 in the tabernacle erected for the recent services conducted by Billy Sunday.

In an informal discussion, numerous matters of special interest were considered and the prospects for the future of the plant shipping business were talked over by various members.

DAYTON, O.

The Market.

The first genuine evidence of winter was quite visible last week, when the mercury for the first time this season took a sudden drop below zero. The drop was accompanied by high winds, which kept all hands busy with the coal shovel. The temperature continued below the zero mark for several days, but most of the time there was plenty of sunshine, which has done wonders to stock already; for during the last five or six weeks of continued dull weather everything has been seemingly at a standstill. Since the holiday trade, business has dropped off considerably, and as far as orders are concerned, the florist is not overtaxed with them. Stock is especially fine and, while as yet the supply is limited, there is plenty of all kinds to meet the demands. Besides roses and carnations, there is a good line of bulbous stock on the market.

Various Notes.

A. Miller, of A. Henderson & Co., Chicago, was in town last week.

Elmer Jenkins, one of our suburban florists, was in town last week. He tells us that he has a fine line of bulbous stock coming on for the early spring trade.

Nick Mety, who a few years ago was engaged in the florists' business in North Dayton, has torn his place down and is selling the material. Since Mr. Mety left Dayton his place was run by the Furst Floral Co., which recently moved into its own quarters.

I am glad to report that Mrs. Elizabeth Young's condition is not quite so serious as at first thought, although she will be confined to her home for about six weeks.

During the cold snap of a few days ago the Heiss Co. was unfortunate in having part of a bench of Bostons frozen.

Harry Smith, of Piqua, O., chose the worst day in winter to come to Dayton to make a few friendly calls on his brother florists. R. A. L.

SEEDLINGS

For the last 15 years we have selected three-fourths of our seed bearing Cyclamen stock before Xmas, to assure early blooming plants, and claim the finest commercial strain in this country; no fizzle of many so-called English varieties. Our aim is strong growers, that don't have to be petted to be grown into a choice salable plant—a well built, five petaled flower (many of them at one time), with well marked foliage; every plant an ideal, a prize-winner. Received first and second prizes at the Toledo Florists' Club meeting early in November, when blooming Cyclamens were scarce. Strong August seedlings, now ready for a shift, once transplanted, $3.00 per 100, $25.00 per 1,000; 3-inch, 4-inch, 5-inch and 6-inch plants, for this season's blooming, at from 10c to 75c each. Cash with order.

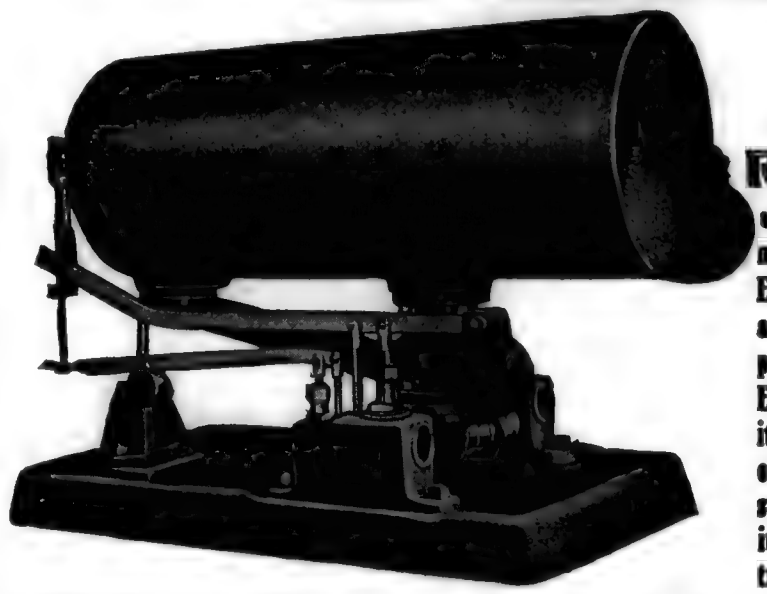
COAL OR NATURAL GAS.

We have a house 20 x 110, heated by a boiler which is eight feet in length, with a firebox 2 x 3 feet. We heat by steam and have about 700 feet of 2-inch pipe in use. It requires a ton of coal a week to heat the house in moderate weather and a little more in zero weather. How many feet of gas would be equivalent to the ton of coal, or would heat the house for a week? Which would be the cheaper, coal at $2.50 to $3 per ton or gas at 12½ cents per thousand? A neighbor has a well that we can get for $30 per year, but we can not tell whether the flow would be sufficient to run the boiler. A gas company will furnish us gas at 12½ cents per thousand, but we think that would make too much difference in the cost of heating. Our location is northern Ohio. O. E. K.

The temperature at which the house is kept is not stated and it is not possible to judge of the efficiency of the system, but with the amount of pipe mentioned, if properly installed, there should be no difficulty in maintaining a temperature of 60 degrees in zero weather. One ton of coal per week should keep up this temperature, with the weather averaging 10 degrees above zero at night.

A good deal depends on the quality of the coal, but if it is a good grade of run of mine, the gas at 25 cents per thousand cubic feet should be found about as economical as the coal when allowance is made for the labor of firing, removing ashes, etc. It would not be safe to rely upon the well mentioned, as the pressure might go down some cold night and serious harm might result. The well may be a bargain at the price mentioned, and could be used with safety if a connection with the city gas main is also made, for use in case the pressure of natural gas fails.



COPPER FLUES IN BOILERS.

Has any brother florist had experience with copper flues in boilers? The manufacturers of my boiler discourage the use of copper flues on account of their high cost, though admitting at the same time that the life of their superior charcoal-iron flues is only about seven years. When one notes the great number of boiler flues advertised for this, that and the other purpose, he is doubtful whether the average life of iron or steel flues is that long.

I asked a prominent construction engineer what he thought of copper flues. He condemned the idea of using them in a hot water boiler, because of their high cost. He admitted, however, that he had never given the subject much thought, and stated that he had noticed that when space was an object, when the maximum service for the minimum space was desired, copper flues were used. A strong plea in their favor, was it not? Why not consider economy and durability, together with the first cost, in this as in other lines in our business?

On inquiring I find that iron flues for my boiler, No. 8 gauge, would cost $40, and that copper flues, No. 11 gauge, would cost $102. Since No. 11 is the standard gauge for high pressure steam copper flues, would not No. 14 be adequate for hot water, with no pressure except from the expansion tank, eight feet above the boiler? This would reduce the cost to $70.

Since copper will not scale and is therefore of great durability, and since by its use one is enabled to get the heat applied much closer to the water, would it not seem advisable, from an economical point of view, both in durability and daily service, to use copper flues? What reader of The Review can tell us from experience?

BOILER UNDER RESIDENCE.

I have two connected houses, 20 x 190 and 30 x 190. They measure twelve feet to the ridge pole and four and one-half feet to the eaves and have board sides. I have two boilers, twenty and twenty-four horse-power, and use hot water. Will these boilers heat another house, a new one, 30 x 180, alongside the old houses? The flow pipes at present start over the boilers, about eighteen inches from the top of the boilers, and the return pipes come in about one foot lower. I want to know the proper way to pipe the houses. At present the flow pipes and return pipes are all in the walks and the flow pipes are only about six to ten inches above the return pipes. The expansion tank is connected to the return pipes.

As I understand it, the flow pipes should rise six to ten feet over the boilers, run with a gradual fall to the opposite end of the houses and then drop to the return pipes, which should also have a good fall back to the boilers. In my case it is difficult to let the flow pipes rise directly over the boilers, as the boiler room is under my dwelling. Could I let the flow pipes rise, say, four feet above the boilers, then go out from under the building and rise a second time, to within three or four feet of the ridge poles? I am located in southern Kansas. J. L. V.

While it is well to have the flow pipes rise to the highest point in the system as soon as possible, it will make but little difference if the plan suggested is followed and the highest point is not reached until after the flow pipes have entered the greenhouses. In fact, although the downhill system should be used whenever possible, if the conditions are such that it will be easier to install an uphill flow pipe it will give good results when the returns are higher than the top of the boiler.

The inquiry does not give the temperatures desired in the houses, but if an average of 60 degrees would be the maximum temperature, which would probably be ample, there should be no difficulty in heating the three houses, provided the boilers are up to capacity and everything is properly arranged. There is, however, only a little surplus capacity and it would require skillful handling to maintain a temperature of 60 degrees in all of the houses when the outside temperature drops below zero. For 60 degrees use in the new house, 30 x 180, either three 3-inch or five 2½-inch flow pipes and fifteen 2-inch returns. For 50 degrees use only ten returns.

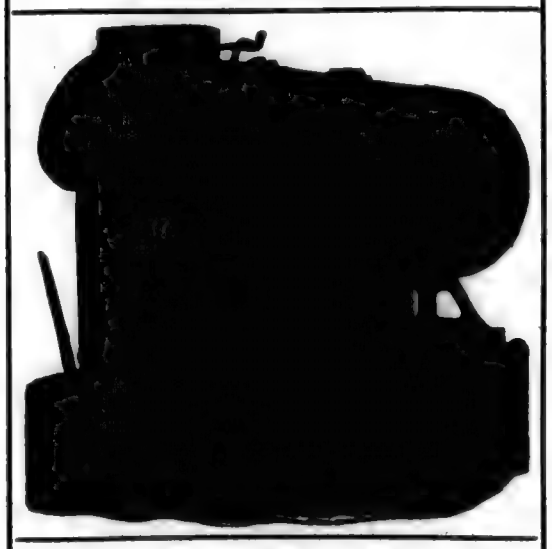
WHAT THE USERS SAY ABOUT KROESCHELL BOILERS

60,000 sq. ft. of glass carried by No. 15 Kroeschell Boiler--No trouble to maintain temperatures in coldest weather.

I am heating 60,000 sq. ft. of glass with Kroeschell Boilers and expect to heat another house with same boiler capacity. I have not the least trouble in maintaining 50° to 54° in the coldest weather.

USE LESS COAL THAN OTHERS.



In comparing my place with others, we use less coal than anyone I know of, and it is a regular snap for the fireman to do the work with Kroeschell Boilers.

Combining the Kroeschell Piping System, Kroeschell Boilers and Generator, it is really a pleasure to heat my place.

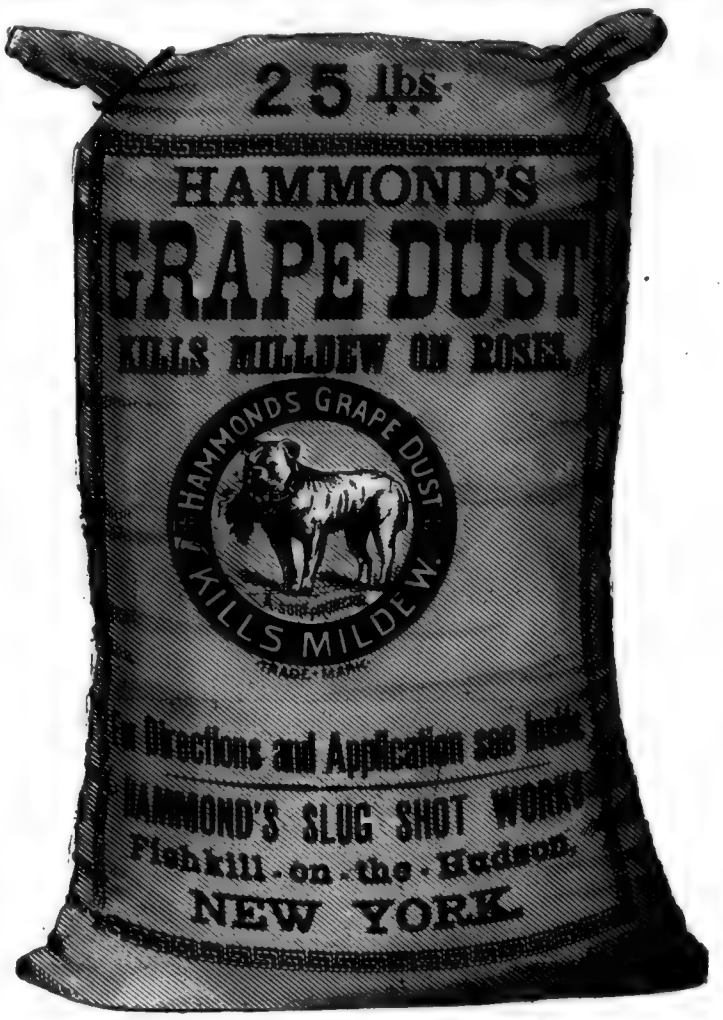
The Market.

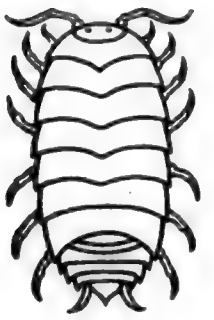
At last a real touch of winter is on us, and the thermometer is flirting with the zero point. A blizzard came down on us January 5, with a heavy snow and high winds, and continued low temperatures prevail. Trade still is holding its own. There has been a great deal of funeral work and this has kept everybody hustling.

Roses have been a little off crop lately and the continued cloudy weather has made stock extremely soft. Carnations are coming in nicely, but the demand more than equals the supply, especially in white, which has been in heavy request for work. Sweet peas are not any too plentiful and the demand is good.



The sale for potted plants has been quite heavy and a nice lot of plants is moved right along. Azaleas, cyclamens and primroses are the favorites at present. There is also a good call for ferns, in which the Bostons, Piersoni and Whitmani take the lead. Greens have been a little scarce for the last few weeks, and it is hard to get enough to go around.

Various Notes.



R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co., of White Marsh, Md., is contemplating the erection of a modern building for the storing of dahlia and canna roots. It will be built so as to make it possible to drive teams through the center. The company has had difficulty in finding space to store the enormous quantities of bulbs and roots. The building will be 60x300 feet, with a glass roof. The concern also will erect several new greenhouses. About forty acres of cannas will be planted next season. The demand has been exceptionally heavy this fall. R. A. Vincent has been suffering from an attack of the grip, but was well enough to go to Detroit this week.

James Boone, assistant superintendent of parks, was presented with a sterling silver fruit dish by the Maryland State Horticultural Society, as a token of appreciation of the way the plans were laid for the recent horticultural show held in the Fifth Regiment armory. Q.

New Hamburg, N. Y.—Henry Osterhoudt, superintendent for W. P. Clyde, speaks highly of Carnation Princess Charming, both for yield and beauty. Bountiful is still the best white here. A house of 600 Enchantress produced a cut of 1,600 blooms during December, which is believed to be a record.

UP-TO-DATE GROWERS SPRAY

TO-BAK-INE LIQUID

And Are Not Troubled With

Thrips on Roses or Carnations

TO-BAK-INE Liquid in cans: ¼ pint, 60c; ½ pint, $1.10; 1 pint, $2.00; 1 quart, $3.95; 1 gallon, $15.00. Also put up in 10, 20 and 40-gallon casks with locked faucet, for large growers.

Directions for Use

MR. A. F. J. BAUR, the well-known Carnation expert, writes: "If I had a carnation house ever so badly infested by Greenfly or Thrips, I would spray with To-Bak-Ine Liquid not stronger than three teaspoonfuls to a gallon of water, and six gallons of this solution would spray a house 25x100 feet thoroughly. I would rather spray with this strength every day for a few days than to make it stronger. Ordinarily one spraying in two days is enough for the first week, and thereafter once or possibly twice each week will be sufficient.

"I am satisfied that spraying is most effective in destroying these pests, as well as the least harmful to the plants or blooms.

"In order to derive the most benefit from the use of To-Bak-Ine, it should be used regularly throughout the season, as a preventive. We begin to spray our carnations with it regularly once each week as soon as they are well established on the beds in the houses, about September 1 (or sooner if any insects show themselves), and we find that this will keep away Aphis, Thrips, and in addition to intelligent syringing it will keep down Red Spider. The number of blooms usually lost through the ravages of these pests can be reduced to a minimum by the use of To-Bak-Ine. These blooms saved will easily pay for the cost of spraying and have a good balance over. It is surprising how many blooms are discarded by growers, which could have been saved by the use of this preparation; when you figure them at 3c to 5c each during midwinter it runs up into money quickly.

"No grower can afford to be without this preparation and it will take merely a fair trial to convince anyone of its value. When I begin on To-Bak-Ine I find it hard to stop. I feel that I could not possibly say too much in its favor, especially as a remedy for Aphis and Thrips."—Signed, A. F. J. BAUR.

The demand has been exceptionally heavy this fall. R. A. Vincent has been suffering from an attack of the grip, but was well enough to go to Detroit this week.

James Boone, assistant superintendent of parks, was presented with a sterling silver fruit dish by the Maryland State Horticultural Society, as a token of appreciation of the way the plans were laid for the recent horticultural show held in the Fifth Regiment armory. Q.

New Hamburg, N. Y.—Henry Osterhoudt, superintendent for W. P. Clyde, speaks highly of Carnation Princess Charming, both for yield and beauty. Bountiful is still the best white here. A house of 600 Enchantress produced a cut of 1,600 blooms during December, which is believed to be a record.

Thrips on Roses or Carnations

TO-BAK-INE Liquid in cans: ¼ pint, 60c; ½ pint, $1.10; 1 pint, $2.00; 1 quart, $3.95; 1 gallon, $15.00. Also put up in 10, 20 and 40-gallon casks with locked faucet, for large growers.

Directions for Use

MR. A. F. J. BAUR, the well-known Carnation expert, writes: "If I had a carnation house ever so badly infested by Greenfly or Thrips, I would spray with To-Bak-Ine Liquid not stronger than three teaspoonfuls to a gallon of water, and six gallons of this solution would spray a house 25x100 feet thoroughly. I would rather spray with this strength every day for a few days than to make it stronger. Ordinarily one spraying in two days is enough for the first week, and thereafter once or possibly twice each week will be sufficient.

"I am satisfied that spraying is most effective in destroying these pests, as well as the least harmful to the plants or blooms.

"In order to derive the most benefit from the use of To-Bak-Ine, it should be used regularly throughout the season, as a preventive. We begin to spray our carnations with it regularly once each week as soon as they are well established on the beds in the houses, about September 1 (or sooner if any insects show themselves), and we find that this will keep away Aphis, Thrips, and in addition to intelligent syringing it will keep down Red Spider. The number of blooms usually lost through the ravages of these pests can be reduced to a minimum by the use of To-Bak-Ine. These blooms saved will easily pay for the cost of spraying and have a good balance over. It is surprising how many blooms are discarded by growers, which could have been saved by the use of this preparation; when you figure them at 3c to 5c each during midwinter it runs up into money quickly.

"No grower can afford to be without this preparation and it will take merely a fair trial to convince anyone of its value. When I begin on To-Bak-Ine I find it hard to stop. I feel that I could not possibly say too much in its favor, especially as a remedy for Aphis and Thrips."—Signed, A. F. J. BAUR.

The Kentucky Society of Florists held its January meeting at Anders Rasmussen's establishment, 1108 Vincennes street, New Albany, Ind., Wednesday afternoon, January 3. President G. Robert Miller called the meeting to order and, after the minutes of the December meeting were approved, in a few fitting words installed the following officers for 1912:

President—Anders Rasmussen.
Vice-president—H. Kleinstarink.
Corresponding Secretary—August R. Baumer.
Financial Secretary—Gus Kleinsteuber.
Treasurer—Frank Kleinsteuber.
Sergeant-at-arms—Joseph Molck.
Trustee—Joseph Losson.

President Rasmussen, in accepting the chair, gave the members a short talk on what could be done by coöperation, and to stimulate the interest already manifest he offered three prizes for the best three papers, prepared by the members, upon subjects pertaining to our business. These papers are not to be signed, but to be sent to the president with a card of the author, and he will number them and they will then be read at the monthly meetings and at the end of the year a committee of members who have not entered papers will be named to judge the papers.

The next regular meeting of the society will be held at the store of Henry Fuchs, Wednesday evening, February 7.

The Market.

Trade last week was good, but flowers are none too plentiful. Those offered include carnations, roses, violets, sweet peas, snapdragons, lilies, Paper Whites and stevia, but the latter are nearing the end. A few freesias are putting in an appearance and flowering plants are in good demand.

The severe cold spell which struck us last week has forced the growers to pile on coal to keep the houses from freezing up.

Various Notes.

Wm. P. Peirce had a nice window display last week. As his store is white, everything colored shows up beautifully.

It is rumored that Peter Murray, of Fairhaven, will build another big greenhouse and open a retail store in this city. Mr. Murray has quite a large range and everything is in fine shape.

THE EUREKA CARNATION SUPPORT

Use this method and you will never regret it. I have had more than 20 years' experience, and have used from tying the plants to a wooden stake method on up to the present. Why is it they are making a two ring support instead of one nowadays? Because it is more economical. Now, I have taken a leap with same idea in view, only the material I use is half made, all ready, takes no machinery, no special labor. The ring supports are not a very profitable investment for anyone, manufacturer or florist; never have become popular, because they do not fill the bill. If any one wants one or more ring supports they can be made by far cheaper from the material I use than any other. But why fool away your time over individuality when you can do a whole row of plants up far better in nearly the same time? Why shovel coal when you can dump a whole cart load just as well? Some seem to think, because No. 18 wire and cotton string are cheaper, they are employing a very economical method. But there is a little narrowness in this thought, and no excuse whatever now for using such. I plant 11x8 inches. I find this most economical and satisfactory for large plants. I have at least 6 inches of clear space between each row, and plants have lots of room in the right direction; they get the direct sunlight between the rows; they are not strewn broadcast all over the bed like a wheat field. I do not cut buds for flowers, or string by mistake, and I can see all the dry spots plainly. I do not break flowers by running my arm among the plants. It will support sprawly Pink Delight and White Perfection as well as any other carnation. Since using this method our plants look 25 per cent better. If after paying for the permit and instructions any reliable florist has tried it thoroughly and is dissatisfied in any way, upon return of the permit I will refund him the amount paid. I want to do satisfactory business or none at all. Experience has taught me that this method of supporting carnations is the most efficient and economical, and experience has theory beaten to death. Nearly everyone entering our houses gives his unsolicited favorable comments, and the proof of what I say is before me daily. Send $5.00 for permit and instructions. Infringements or using without permission may cost more.

A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

The Market.

Business started off with a rush after New Year's day and continued so for several days, but the latter part of the week buying dropped off and gave stock a chance to catch up, although several large dinner parties kept the store men busy. Violets sold well last week, the day's supply being exhausted on several occasions.

The cold snap, which started with a blizzard, arrived promptly on the evening of January 4 and for four days the thermometer hovered around zero—4 below was the coldest noted, and that, accompanied by a sixty-miles-an-hour gale, cut a mighty hole in Cleveland's coal pile. Business at the downtown stores was at a standstill and gave the boys a chance to rest up, for they needed it after the holiday rush.

The stock coming into this market now is of good quality in nearly all lines. Richmond roses are scarce, while Beauties are about equal to the demand, and Killarney and White Killarney keep in good supply. Carnations are cleaned up daily at good prices. Bulb stock is arriving more plentifully every day. There is some good stevia to be had, but the supply is about exhausted. Maidenhair fern is plentiful, but plumosus is decidedly scarce.

The regular monthly meeting of the Dutchess County Horticultural Society was held here on Wednesday, December 27, 1911. William Marshall, of New York, was a guest of the society at this meeting.

The election of officers took place and this brought out a good attendance. All the old officers were reëlected, namely: President, C. J. Reynolds, of this city; vice-president, James Blair, Staatsburg, N. Y.; secretary, Herbert G. Cottam, Wappingers Falls, N. Y.; treasurer, Geo. W. Sweet, of this city.

The matter of having the annual dinner early was thoroughly discussed, and the suggestion that a smoker or beefsteak supper also be held was given due consideration and referred to the dinner committee.

After adjournment the members all repaired to the D'Arcy bowling alleys, where an enjoyable and strenuous afternoon was spent. Messrs. Marshall, Witney and Mason were the stars of the afternoon. Mr. Marshall offered a budding knife for the high man, which went to Mr. Witney, of Fishkill, N. Y. The society intends to continue these bowling matches after each meeting during the winter, as they bring and keep the boys together for at least one afternoon each month. H. G. C.

THE WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW

TUESDAY

The latest hour at which advertisements, or changes of advertisements, can be accepted is 5 p. m. Tuesday.

Troy, N. Y.—J. G. Barrett began the new year by fighting a fire that threatened at one time to wipe out the entire place, but which was fortunately confined to a barn. Luckily for Mr. Barrett, his wagons and horses were gotten out in time.

SEASONABLE NOTES.

Bedding Plants.

Now is the time when bedding geraniums should receive attention. If they have been standing close together, they must be spaced so as to give each plant more breathing room. If left crowded, it will mean spindling plants and much decayed foliage. Any not yet potted on from 2-inch pots should get a shift right away. Fall rooted cuttings should now be rooted nicely in 3-inch pots, but as salable plants are not wanted until May there is still good time to pot and grow even smaller sized ones. A suitable soil consists of six parts loam and one part old manure. Spent hotbed or mushroom manure is good. It is well to sterilize it to kill worms, which are liable to be numerous in such manures. Add a good dash of sand also, and pot firmly. For the last potting I prefer to use fine bone in lieu of cow or horse manure. The plants grow less vigorously in it, but the wood is harder and shorter jointed, and, what is most important, the plants flower far more freely than when they have made a soft growth in compost containing rotted manure.

Temperature and Moisture.

Geraniums, after each potting, like a little bottom heat. In fact, they seem to enjoy it all the time, and it is especially helpful to them in winter. Do not play the hose indiscriminately over them. There is no need to wet the foliage at all, and the plants will keep much healthier if run a little on the dry side between waterings. A soft growth, with too much moisture in the soil and on the foliage, increases the probabilities of leaf-spot or blight. Maintaining a drier atmosphere, with less water at the root and none on the foliage, picking off all affected leaves and giving the plants a reasonable amount of growing space, is the best way to check the spread of disease in geraniums. I have tried spraying, but with indifferent results. Clean culture is what they need.

Propagation.

Probably there are many cuttings now in the progagating bench. Do not allow these to become too strongly rooted before potting them on. I prefer to place the cuttings singly in 2-inch pots of sandy loam, rather than insert them in the cutting bench. They like a bottom heat of 60 to 65 degrees. After getting one soaking watering, they should be run a little on the dry side until they root. Never give any shade and do not spray overhead, as you do with carnation or mum cuttings. With proper treatment ninety-five per cent should root without trouble, and, if kept potted on, these will make, not as large plants as the fall rooted ones, but nice, salable stock in 3-inch or 3½-inch pots. Give them a temperature of 55 degrees. For the earlier fall stock 50 degrees is better, while they will do well even at 45 degrees.

Good Double Varieties.

There are many florists who each year buy rooted cuttings or stock in 2-inch pots from specialists, and for some of these a list of first-class bedding varieties may be helpful. In doubles S. A. Nutt, dark red, is in great demand. Alphonse Ricard, rich vermilion red, is incomparable in its particular shade of color. E. H. Trego is a rich, dazzling scarlet, which makes a brilliant bed. Jean Viaud, mauve rose, is popular; so is Beaute Poitevine, shrimp pink, shading at the edges to white. La Favorite is a grand double white, and Comtesse d' Harcourt is equally good. Marquis Castellane, reddish crimson, beds beautifully; so does the old double giant, with orange scarlet flowers. Mme. Landry, salmon pink, shaded scarlet, was splendid last summer; so was Mrs. Lawrence, salmon pink, tinged with white. Marquis de Montmort, bright purple, is the best of its particular color. Among newer varieties of doubles these have proved good: Mme. Canovas, better than S. A. Nutt, scarlet, shaded maroon, beds beautifully; Jean Oberle, one of Bruant's best sorts, peach pink in color; President Baillet, another Bruant, rich scarlet in color, and Fleuve Blanc, a pure white Bruant.

Single Varieties.

In singles a boiled down selection of first-class bedders should include the following: Dryden, red, with pure white throat; Snowdrop, still the best white; Jacquerie, rich crimson scarlet, huge trusses, unequaled as a bedder; Paul Crampel, the most brilliant of all bedding geraniums, the most intense glowing scarlet of any in cultivation, enormously grown in Europe and does finely here; Telegraph, Lincoln red, a grand bedder, quite vigorous; Mrs. Brown Potter, clear pink, a gem; Mrs. E. Rawson, bright scarlet, and Granville, rose pink, white blotches.

SWEET PEAS DAMPING OFF.

Enclosed you will find some sweet peas, which I wish you would examine and kindly tell me what causes them to damp off. The soil they are growing in is composed of rotted sod and cow manure. I am giving them a bottom heat of from 55 to 60 degrees. Would too much moisture be causing the trouble? This is my first experience in sweet pea culture, and I shall appreciate any advice you may give.

H. A. B.

If the cow manure used was rather new, it would in itself be responsible in part for the damping off. Cow manure and rotted sod make an ideal compost. The manure, however, should always be well rotted. I would judge that your plants are in benches rather than in solid beds, and that some heating pipes are below the benches. Sweet peas are not benefited, but injured, by bottom heat. They love a cool bottom, and, provided good drainage is afforded, they succeed much better in beds than in benches. Another possible cause for the plants damping off is allowing the seedlings to remain too thick. They should be at least three to four inches apart in the rows. This may look thin at first, but the plants will make stronger haulm and branch much more freely than when grown more crowded.

If your soil is rather sour, which would be indicated by a scummy formation on the surface, work a little air-slaked lime into it and keep the soil scratched over frequently. In an acid soil damping off will be sure to start. Sweet peas like a good water supply. They also need plenty of sweet, fresh air. Anything approaching a close atmosphere is bad for them. While they can be grown cool in the early stages of growth, a temperature of 48 to 50 degrees while flowering will be found about right.

C. W.

SWEET PEA BUDS DROPPING.

I am mailing you under separate cover a branch from one of my sweet pea vines, which you will see has blasted buds. Can you tell me the cause and the remedy for this? They are in a house that is run at 52 to 55 degrees at night, and nearly all buds have come like the sample and have fallen off without producing any flowers to speak of. Last year I had the same kind of seed, had the plants in the same place and had an enormous crop, with stems as long as sixteen inches.

W. K. S.

Early in the season it is not at all uncommon for sweet peas to drop their earliest buds, both under glass and outdoors, and if your plants are just starting to flower I would not worry about it. Even if they are in the same soil as last season, provided they are in solid beds and the soil has been liberally manured and deeply spaded over, they should do satisfactorily. Some of the best cultivators under glass do not change their soil, and their crops each year are splendid. Of course, it is otherwise in raised benches; I am presuming that yours are on the ground. Your night temperature, however, is decidedly too high for sweet peas. Drop it to 48 degrees at night. Air freely on every possible occasion, avoiding cold drafts; keep the surface soil well stirred and your plants should show a steady improvement. Avoid using nitrate of soda, sulphate of ammonia or other fertilizers high in nitrogen. Instead, top-dressings of pulverized sheep manure or fine bone, scratched in, are to be preferred. C. W.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

Closing Session.

At the closing session of the annual convention of the American Carnation Society, at Detroit, Friday morning, January 12, the experiment of holding a joint exhibition with the American Rose Society was approved by Peter Fisher, Eugene Dailledouze and Richard Witterstaetter, reporting as a committee on president's address, and by the society through the adoption of the committee's report.

C. H. Totty invited the society to hold its next exhibition and meeting at New York, in April, 1913, in connection with the National Flower Show, stating that $1,000 will then be offered for carnation classes. On motion of Eugene Dailledouze the invitation was accepted unanimously.

R. T. Brown, of Queens, N. Y., was then nominated for vice-president and officers elected as reported in The Review a week ago.

Secretary Baur read the report of the judges. This also was printed in last week's Review. Two additional awards were made to A. J. Stahelin, first in class No. 42, for arrangement of not more than 200 blooms, and second in class No. 43, for display of carnation blooms covering eighty to 100 square feet, no first being awarded.

President Valentine presented the gold medal to Peter Fisher, won on Gorgeous; the silver medal to R. Witterstaetter, won on J. A. Valentine, and the bronze medal and Hitchings sweepstakes cup to C. H. Totty, won on Wodenethe. Each one responded briefly.

A. M. Herr, S. J. Goddard and W. R. Nicholson were appointed a committee on final resolutions.

The meeting closed with the reading of Hugo Schroeter's paper, "Everybody's Flower," which also was printed in last week's Review. Mr. Schroeter's point of view is that of the retailer and, as most of the audience were growers, the discussion brought out quite a diversity of opinion. W. N. Rudd started the ball by dissenting from the suggestion that the growers should take a hand in relieving gluts. He said the law of supply and demand is immutable and that growers and retailers alike must adapt their business methods to it. He said he does not believe the street fakers are an injury to the retailers, because the street fakers' customers are not store customers, but the faker represents an additional sale for the growers, who must get the money the best way they can. J. T. Scott indorsed Mr. Rudd's remarks and M. A. Patten said he knew instances where fakers buy the best grade of stock but sell at close prices. Good summer carnations would not be new to the best markets, he said.

F. R. Pierson called attention to the difference between what the consumer pays and what the grower gets. He said the retailers should reduce prices and stimulate demand when markets are low, adding that this also would deprive the fakers of their best opportunity. He added that he looks forward to seeing growers eventually retailing their product, just as many already are wholesaling. W. W. Gammage said that his concern formerly wholesaled its product, but now retails most of it, and has found that the retailer must keep up a good average price or he can not exist.

Philip Breitmeyer said that he recently had changed his ideas and does not now oppose the faker. He said that the institution of a Saturday sale had convinced him that the retailers must wake up and adopt the methods employed in other lines of merchandising.

J. A. Valentine closed a very interesting discussion by saying that if the trade goes to the faker or anyone else it is proof that the other fellow is serving the public more nearly as it wants to be served; therefore methods must be changed as may be necessary to hold one's own—there can be no set rule.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The full list of awards at the Detroit exhibition was published in last week's Review, but later the judges placed two cups which the society has had on hand for some time. These had not been included in the regular premium list, but had been offered in a special list sent out by the secretary a few days before the show.

The Alexander Montgomery cup for new rose of American origin was awarded to Stockton & Howe, Princeton, N. J., for Rose Princeton.

The Ellwanger & Barry cup for sweepstakes prize for the choicest exhibit of perfect roses was awarded to A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn.

THE SMOKER.

Formal banquets are no longer in favor—the smoker's the thing. Thursday evening the big dining room of the Cadillac hotel was filled with small tables, with a long central table carrying a buffet luncheon. There was a corncob pipe and package of tobacco for each guest, with plenty to keep the whistles wet. The doings began at 9:30 and lasted until midnight. George E. Browne, president of the Detroit Florists' Club, introduced J. F. Sullivan as master of ceremonies. He called on Richard Vincent, president of the Society of American Florists; J. A. Valentine, president of the American Carnation Society; A. Farenwald, president of the American Rose Society; P. J. Foley, president-elect of the Chicago Florists' Club; Wallace R. Pierson and several others, who made brief remarks. W. J. Lawrence, of Toronto, who has a splendid tenor voice, was warmly encored. His singing was a feature of the banquet given when the American Carnation Society last met in Detroit, eight years ago. Further entertainment was provided by a sextette and several vaudeville artists.

CONVENTION COMMENT.

The Detroit retailers maintained several tables during the show. J. F. Sullivan had a rose decoration. Gust Taepke had a table decorated with baskets of spring flowers. Carey & Fell used roses and violets. E. A. Fetters used roses. A characteristic English wedding table decoration was shown by Mrs. W. Munt, the wife of a recently arrived gardener. The Bemb Floral Co. put up a sectional cork bark summer house at one end of the hall, used for A. J. Stahelin's display of red carnations.

A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn., was the largest exhibitor at the Detroit rose show, also as far from home as any. Over 2,500 cut blooms were staged by this one exhibitor.

Silver cups, once so popular for advertising purposes, are at a discount. The American Rose Society had several on hand that it was found difficult to dispose of.

It was an interesting circumstance that at one of the tables at the smoker at the Cadillac January 11 sat Wm. Martin, of Portland, Ore., and C. S. Strout, of Biddeford, a suburb of Portland, Me. There were the extremes met.

J. A. Peterson bought the birchbark pergola that occupied the center of the big hall and will put it up in his front yard at Cincinnati. Mrs. Peterson intends to cover it with climbing roses.

The gate receipts were divided, half to the Detroit Florists' Club and a quarter each to the Rose and Carnation societies, but they amounted to less than $500, which was only a drop in the bucket. The hall cost the Detroit Florists' Club $600, with $200 additional for covering the floor. Also, the Cadillac hotel was paid $1.25 a head for those who attended the smoker, nearly 250, including locals. These are just a few of the expenses. The premium lists also ran into considerable money.

S. J. Goddard, South Framingham, Mass.; C. S. Strout, Biddeford, Me., and E. A. Peirce, Waltham, Mass., went to Dorner's, at La Fayette, and Baur & Steinkamp's, at Indianapolis, after the Detroit doings.

J. A. Valentine and W. N. Budd went to New York with C. H. Totty January 12 to close a contract with the Grand Central Palace for the National Flower Show, to be held the week of April 5, 1913. The National Flower Show committee is going into partnership with the Palace people as a means of avoiding a rent liability of some $2,000 a day.

None of the carnation novelties showed up as well as they did at the National Flower Show at Boston last March.

There was but one vase of the Lady Hillingdon rose in the show, but it attracted much attention. The only criticism was on the long neck.

Earl Mann, who represented the E. G. Hill Co., said that the concern's sales of Sunburst already exceed the sales of any variety sent out since Richmond and promise, before the season is over, to beat even the introductory season's sales of Richmond itself.

FRED DORNER AS A HYBRIDIZER.

[A paper by Prof. H. B. Dorner, of Urbana, Ill., read before the American Carnation Society, in convention at Detroit, January 10 to 12, 1912.]

At the earnest solicitation of your president, I am presenting to you today a paper on "The Work and Methods of the Late Fred Dorner in the Hybridization of Carnations." It is a pleasure to do this, as I was directly associated with him for a number of years in this, his most beloved work.

Fred Dorner was born in the little town of Schilltach, Baden, Germany, and it was there he spent the first seventeen years of his life. He inherited from his mother his great love of flowers and in his early years devoted a great deal of time to the care of her garden.

At the age of 17 he emigrated to this country and joined his brother at La Fayette, Ind. There he was employed for a number of years at various occupations. About 1870 he rented a place then known as Gaasch's Garden, and became a market gardener. In the little greenhouse on the place he grew a few potted plants, which were sold mostly from the wagon at the market place. Five years later he moved to Indiana avenue, where he had better greenhouse facilities. There his time, at first, was divided between the growing of flowers, fruits and vegetables, but as the demand for flowers became greater the growing of fruits and vegetables was omitted.

At this time his trade was purely retail and the houses were devoted to such miscellaneous stock as was required at that time. This, then, was the scene of his first achievements in carnation breeding.

His First Experiments.

In about 1888 Fred Dorner became interested in some experiments in the breeding of carnations being carried on by Mr. Van Landeghem, who had charge of the small greenhouses at Purdue University. He quickly saw the possibilities of the work and became so deeply interested that he took up this line of work himself. For this purpose he used the varieties which he was then growing, and which his records tell us were Silver Spray, Grace Wilder, E. G. Hill, Century, Buttercup, Hinze's White, Mangold, Mrs. Cleveland, Wm. Swayne, Sunrise, Robt. Craig and a variety called Purdue, which was raised by Mr. Van Landeghem, but never disseminated. In the following three years he added the varieties Starlight, Portia, Garfield, Tidal Wave, Andalusia, Golden Gate and Daybreak, which were all used in his work and show today in many of the seedlings grown.

Herman B. Dorner.

As the result of this first year's work in crossing, he secured about 500 seedlings. These were planted in the field and carefully observed, and those which he desired to test out were brought into the house. Well can I remember seeing him day after day carefully examining these wonderful flowers as they were opening. His records show us that of the 500 seedlings grown about twenty-five per cent were splits, fifty per cent singles and twenty-five per cent commercials. From this first year's work were secured the varieties Christina Dorner, Tecumseh, Hoosier, Mrs. Harrison, Indiana and Ben Hur. This, then, marks the end of his first year's work in the breeding of carnations.

His First Seedling House.

The growing of these seedlings necessitated further accommodations, and so a lean-to house, about fifty feet long and ten to twelve feet wide, was built and was heated by means of two stoves. The carnations were planted directly in the bench, the same as today, and were carefully observed and varieties selected for further testing. This little house was the home of the seedling carnations for two years, until he moved into his new range on the opposite side of the street. With this beginning he continued and from year to year grew many seedlings and offered to the public at least one new variety each year.

His work continued uninterruptedly for twenty-one years and during this time he grew over 150,000 seedling carnations. Of these 150,000, not more than seventy-five ever reached the market. The larger number of them went to the dump-heap, but we can not say that their existence was in vain, for many of them were the ancestors of some of his best varieties of today.

Fred Dorner always believed that many of the failures of new varieties were due to the fact that the owners treated them and thought of them as they would pets. They could only see their good qualities and not their shortcomings. After the first few years, with this idea in mind, he insisted upon a thorough test of each variety and would not disseminate it until he was thoroughly convinced that it was better than something already on the market or that it might fill a gap somewhere. It can be truthfully said that no variety was put on the market from his greenhouses unless, as nearly as he could tell, it possessed qualities that would make it a good market variety.

A List of His Varieties.

It may be of interest to have a list of the varieties resulting from his careful and painstaking work. This list does not include all of his varieties that were disseminated, but merely those which he put upon the market himself and those disseminated by E.

G. Hill early in the nineties. The list is as follows:

Many of you are familiar with this part of his work and perhaps would be more interested in the methods used in securing his results. One rule which he insisted upon following was the selection of the best, and the use of none but the best varieties in his breeding work.

He selected as the time for crossing the months of January and February. This selection was made for two reasons: First, because the flowers at this season were at their best and so he had a fair idea as to form, color and growth; the second, and perhaps most important reason, is that at this time of the year there were no insects to interfere with the work. When insects are present they carry the pollen from flower to flower as they seek the honey, and make it impossible to have pure crosses unless each flower is carefully protected by means of a paper bag. This last operation would mean a great expense where from 700 to 1,000 crosses are made each year. This expense is not so much the cost of material as the time necessary to put the bags on and to remove and replace them.

The Production of Seedlings.

In preparing his flowers for seed, the first operation was emasculation, or, in other words, the removal of all stamens. The flowers were selected before the anthers were open and the stamens and inner petals were cut off at about the top of the calyx. The outer petals were left intact, as they always fold up when the ovules are fertilized and so make good indicators. The flower was then staked and left until the pistil was receptive, as was shown by its hairy condition. The pollen was then transferred from the flower selected by means of a camel's-hair brush to the pistil of the emasculated flower. In a few days the petals would curl and close toward the center and, after they had become dry, they were entirely removed. Later, when the seed pod had almost reached full size, the calyx was cut away, so as to prevent moisture lodging at the base of the pod and causing it to decay. The seed, which was ripe by March and early April, was gathered and sown within two or three weeks. The young seedlings were transferred to pots and planted in the field as soon as they were large enough. In the field the plants from each pod had their label, giving the number of the cross and the parentage. These plants were allowed to grow without topping and, as soon as they began to flower, selection was made of the plants to be taken into the house. During some years more than 2,000 seedling plants were benched.

The best varieties are those which flower earliest in the field, and so none of these were neglected. As the plants flowered, all those with double flowers and perfect calyx were marked and then topped, so as to make them branch as much as possible. This selection was continued up to the time that the plants were removed to the house. The seedlings were always some of the last to be brought under shelter and so all the good varieties had a chance to flower outdoors. All varieties not producing blooms by the time of the early frosts were left in the field with the singles and splits, as they were entirely worthless because of their cropping habit. In this manner all the croppers were eliminated.

Testing the Seedlings.

In the house each plant was given a label upon which was the number of the seed pod, and, as the plants began to flower, all promising varieties were selected for a second year's trial and given a new number with the year. The cuttings were made from those plants selected and given a second year's trial. If they showed up well the second year they were carried on for a third year, but it was not until after a fourth year's trial that they were placed upon the market. During the time of growing seed, during January and February, no flowers were removed from the second and third year plants, as it was desirable to test their keeping qualities on the plants, as well as to have the flowers for crossing purposes. In this way one was also able to test the color, as to whether or not it would fade out in the sunshine.

Fred Dorner possessed the happy faculty of seeing the future possibilities in the various varieties. In his work he would use for the growing of seeds varieties that to an outsider seemed poor. However, an intimate knowledge of the variety itself, as well as its parentage, suggested to him that it might be the basis of a large flower, a good calyx, a long, stiff stem or a good constitution. Unless the breeder possesses this faculty to a greater or less degree, his work will be entirely haphazard.

He also realized that system and the keeping of records were absolutely necessary for success in his chosen work. He not only thought that the records were necessary, but he kept them with him at all times during the flowering season, so that when, in walking through the house, his attention was attracted to some variety, he was able to look up its parentage and find where it derived its peculiar qualities. These records consist of the number of the plant, the year, the number of the seed pod, the parentage, the color and notes on the habit. He made further study of his various seedlings and would spend much time passing from plant to plant, noting its good and bad qualities and studying its ancestry. He was so familiar with them that he could call hundreds by their numbers and give their parentage.

His Method of Selection.

After the first few years no foreign varieties were used in his work, on account of the fact that these varieties might have had ancestors with objectionable qualities that might show up at any time in the progeny. His work, then, was confined to his own varieties and especially to those in their second and third year's trial. Only such plants as had good constitutions were employed. Such varieties as were subject to stem-rot, rust and other diseases were discarded, as he always had in mind the development of disease-resistant varieties and worked with that end in view.

Before discussing his rules concerning color, foliage; stem and calyx, it might be well to get some conception of his ideal carnation, towards which he was ever striving. He realized that without a good foundation a plant could not produce good flowers nor many of them. His first requisite, then, was a plant that should have branches in all stages of development, and which, when planted in the bench, should show the same number of flowers and buds during the entire year. The leaves of the plant were to be broader and shorter than those varieties that belong to the class known as croppers. The leaves were to have a strong bluish green color, as this is the natural color of those carnations that have strong constitutions. The stems were to be long, and stiff enough to carry the flowers. This did not necessarily mean that they were to hold the flower perfectly erect, as he preferred that the heads should bend just slightly toward the side and so prevent them from looking stiff. The flowers themselves were to have purity of color, were not to be overfilled with petals, were to have size, symmetrical form and fragrance and were to have a non-splitting calyx.

Securing the Right Color.

With this ideal in view, he applied certain rules in order to approach his goal. The early seedlings showed a great variety of color, due to the fact that in an effort to build up a strong constitution it was necessary to use varieties that should have been in classes by themselves. After building up the constitutions it was necessary to secure pure colors. This he accomplished by the careful selection of the colors used. In order to develop a white strain he used white with white, never adding any other color. To secure pinks he used pink with pink, paying little attention as to whether they were light, medium or dark, but to get the clear pinks, as represented by Fiancee and Gloriosa, it was necessary to eliminate the use of any pink with a blue or red undertone. To secure reds he used red with red, or used yellow with his red in an attempt to intensify the color. In speaking of reds in this case, we of course include all the scarlets. For yellow he used yellow with yellow, or in some cases used white or red with the yellow, the red being used to deepen the yellows. Scarlet maroons were used with scarlet maroons or scarlets. Purple maroons were relegated to the purple class. All shades of purple and lavender were used together. In the case of the variegated varieties the course was determined by both the ground color and the variegation, so that with a red and white variegated flower a red and white variegated might be used, or a clear red or white. By following these rules he developed what might be called color strains which, when used together today, give colors of the same value.

Foliage, Stem and Calyx.

In regard to foliage, he always made it a rule never to use together two plants with heavy, coarse foliage and heavy stems. He preferred using a variety with fine foliage with these coarse foliaged ones. While it is true that the coarse growing varieties give the largest flowers, they do not produce enough of them to make them good commercial varieties. The plant with the intermediate foliage is usually the best, giving more flowers of a good, average size.

He always made it a rule not to use, if possible, two short-stemmed varieties, but to use a long and a short stem together, or two long-stemmed varieties. The union of two long-stemmed varieties in many cases gave short-stemmed ones in the first generation, but they also gave long-stemmed ones again in the second or third generation.

Where varieties having large flowers or an overabundance of petals were used, the pollen was secured from flowers inclined to be semi-double. This was, in a way, to prevent the bursting of the calyx. However, it is not always the number of petals, but the way in which they emerge from the calyx, that causes the calyx to split. Where the petals push out from the calyx and continue to develop afterward, there is little trouble from splitting. But where they start to expand before issuing from the calyx the calyx is sure to split. This he always kept in mind.

Before closing I should like to call attention to a race of carnations, if I may call it such, which are direct descendants of the Daybreak, which has played such an important role in carnation breeding. Among the seedlings raised from Daybreak was White Cloud. Lorna, the next of the series, is a seedling of White Cloud. From Lorna came The Belle and from The Belle came White Perfection. White Wonder, the latest of the series, is a seedling of White Perfection. This series is the only one that has ever occurred among the new varieties sent out.

In closing I should say that Fred Dorner's greatest pleasure was to have his florist friends visit him and spend a few hours among his favorite flowers. The work to him was ever fascinating and never lost its charm.

AMONG THE ROSES IN EUROPE.

[A synopsis of a paper by Robert Pyle, of West Grove, Pa., read before the American Rose Society, in convention at Detroit, January 10 to 12, 1912.]

It is a real pleasure to live over again in thought the experience of last summer among the rose growers and in the rose gardens of western Europe. I shall try tonight to tell you what I saw of roses and rose growing among the people, in the public parks and among the rose growers themselves in the countries of France, Germany, the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, England and Ireland, and to tell you, so far as I can, what they told me. If, in passing, we should take a look at some other phase of horticulture as produced by the Europeans, I trust you will not feel it departing too far from the subject in hand, and possibly a glimpse of the life among the people who do or who do not have roses of their own will serve as a setting of this description of our co-workers on the other side of the water.

Furthermore, may I ask you not to be disappointed if what you hear has to do mainly with roses as produced from open-ground culture? Although I think I came in contact with the leading rosarians in each of the countries before mentioned, I saw comparatively little of the roses being forced for the cut flower market.

Pernet-Ducher, Originator of Sunburst, and His Glass.

In the Long English Summers.

To be sure, the summer climate in some of these countries permits such perfect blooms that in England, for example, I recall having visited one prominent grower who was just making a shipment of some thousands, I think, all red blooms, for a fete day at the University of either Oxford or Cambridge. All these were being cut from the open ground early in July. But I hope you will be interested in hearing somewhat of the conditions that obtain with those men abroad who are enthusiastically devoting the best of their lives to producing such roses as will meet the demand of our cut flower trade. For example, I just missed meeting one enterprising American rose grower, who has been accustomed, every other year at least, to spend six weeks in the homes and gardens of these particular hybridizers, in watching, comparing, discarding and selecting a rose or roses that he hopes will be a reputation maker in America. And right here comes in another point, which those getting roses from abroad must bear in mind, that roses which thrive splendidly in Ireland, for example, may fail in America, and vice versa. One of the most prominent members of the American Rose Society was suprised to find in Europe one of his own pet introductions far surpassing anything he had ever seen it do at home.

Last summer in England was an unusually dry one; vegetation suffered, and the roses too, until late in the season, for I understand the fall shows were a great success.

Among the Colchester Growers.

Let us go first to Colchester. We arrive at 7 in the morning. Nearest the station is D. Prior & Son, the old gentleman having retired, leaving affairs in charge of his son, who is manager, with Mr. Heath, the foreman of sixty men.

A half mile away are Benj. R. Cant & Sons, among the largest of the growers, I think, in England. They report 100,000 tree roses in 200 different varieties; they had sixty men at work on fifty acres, with a most interesting trial garden, showing not less than 400 or 500 varieties, the most of them blooming luxuriantly. They were also growing climbing roses under glass even in July. And another item of interest came to my attention as I approached their office through the fields, when I found the men had just left for breakfast after an hour and a half, or more, at work; and one old gentleman laborer, too lame to walk far with the rest, was eating his breakfast from a pail. He outlined their day's work, which is quite as long as ours, with this difference, that the men left home and started work earlier, but stopped oftener through the day, with a lower wage than is customary on our side.

Furthermore, rose growing seems to run in families. We cross the road and two fields and come immediately to the establishment of Frank Cant & Co., another many times winner of the coveted trophy awarded by the National Rose Society for the champion rose grower of the year. Mr. Cant is mayor of Colchester at present, and as such had recently taken part in the many processions held in honor of the coronation. Mr. Nevard and his men referred to Mr. Cant as "The Governor," but this is the customary way of designating the proprietor of all the establishments there.

In the Outskirts of London.

London is the most convenient center from which to visit Colchester; also Canterbury, the home of George Mount & Sons, and Farnham in Surrey, where are S. Bide & Son, specialists in sweet peas and other horticultural lines, as well as an extensive rose business; and most interesting and quite as important as any is Waltham Cross, the century-old place of Wm. Paul & Son, now in charge of Arthur William Paul. During my visit he was interrupted once or twice by his foreman, to inquire especially regarding an order being made ready for the gardens of the royal palace, which constituted one of their best customers.

Two stations beyond, at Cheshunt, is another firm, Paul & Son, George Paul, proprietor. Among all these growers one is impressed by the fact that they are handling two or three times as many varieties of roses as are the largest dealers on this side of the water.

En route to Ireland, we will stop at the establishment of Kelway & Sons, at Somerset, and see their splendid assortment of hardy perennials, with their sample perennial border for the benefit of patrons who visit them, and their acres upon acres of peonies, which are so beautifully reproduced in color in their 342-page catalogue.

Reaching Liverpool, it is a small matter to take boat at 10 p. m., and if you are an early bird you will be up in time to see the glory of the morning light on the beautiful harbor of Belfast, a fitting birthplace for the ocean liners like the Olympic and the Titanic, the latter of which we passed as it was still stripped and was being finished and furnished near its launching place.

Some Famous Belfast Growers.

There are three great rose growers near Belfast and each one is the best. Across the street from my hotel was the town store of Alexander Dickson & Sons, of Newtownards; they are probably best known to American growers. But of similar prominence there is the firm of Hugh Dickson, proprietor of the Royal Nurseries of Belfast and the winner this year of the national trophy, and thus declared champion rose grower of the year in the British Isles. The proprietors of both firms are grandsons of the original Alexander Dickson. As you well know, both firms are doing excellent work in producing, almost annually, new roses of unquestioned merit.

In Belfast you will find almost everyone knows Samuel McGredy & Son also. The present proprietor is a cousin of the Dicksons. He does his own hybridizing. He also has a son at college, so that it looks as if there was good promise of good roses to come from Ireland for many years yet, for certainly the climate is what the roses like, the soil is great and they do grow magnificent flowers. I noticed on the lawns around their homes a real riot of roses. Mrs. Roosevelt, for example, a whole bed of them, had blossoms twice as big as any I had ever seen growing in the open here. Caroline Testout was quite as fine as we have it in Portland, Ore., if not finer. Hence, when one was introduced to a new, unnamed seedling, and the price of $500 or $1,000 was put on it, the question that immediately claimed one's attention was, "How will these roses do in America?" But they have to be tried.

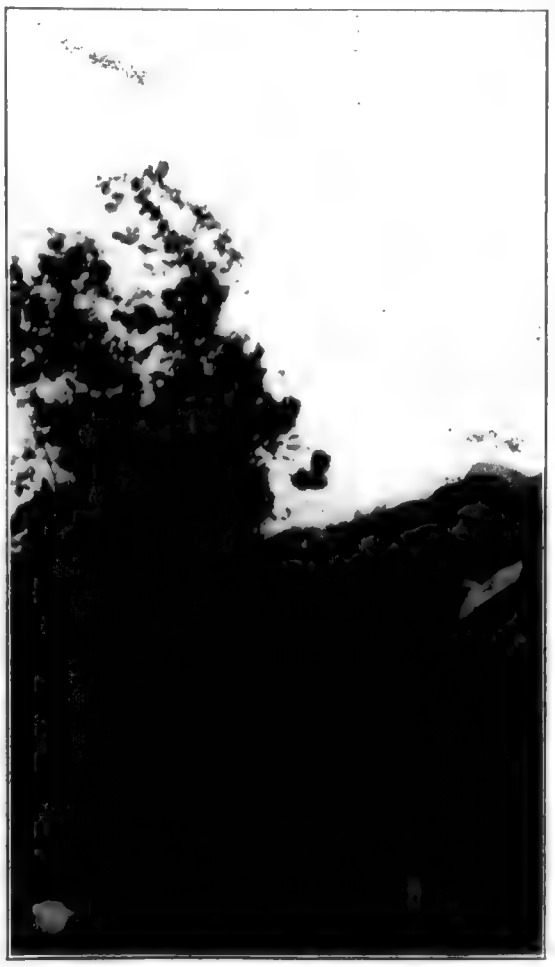
Troy, N. Y.—Samuel Hansen, of Lansingburgh, has built up a snug business during the short time he has been here. The owner of a fine range of glass and assisted by his better half, he considers himself a lucky man.

Burlington, Vt.—A. Gebiecke reports good business. Formerly a pupil of Charles Thorley, he has introduced many up-to-date ideas learned in New York city.

Bennington, Vt.—L. C. Holton has plans formed for extending his plant. The beautiful decorations surrounding the famous battle monument, so much admired by visitors, are done at his establishment.

ROSES IN MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.



[A paper by Charles W. Fullgraf, of St. Louis, Mo., read before the American Rose Society, in convention at Detroit, January 10 to 12, 1912.]

In answer to a request by your society to Otto Koenig, St. Louis, for a brief article on "Roses in the Mississippi Valley," I beg to submit the following paper. It is rather a collection of notes from the representative rose growers in the vicinity than my own ideas, especially in regard to forcing, as I am interested entirely in outdoor work.

Presuming that the majority of those present are practical growers, I am only touching lightly on the general culture of greenhouse roses, confining myself generally to the varieties, the insect pests and plant diseases, and the type of houses used in my vicinity. In dividing the subject into forcing roses for cut flowers and outdoor roses, chiefly for home use, I will take up the forcing first.

Greenhouse Roses.

The culture of roses for cut flowers is not carried on very extensively in the immediate vicinity of St. Louis, the majority being shipped mostly from Illinois and Indiana. This is caused by the cost of fuel and also the natural soil of these states; it is much richer than that west of the Mississippi river, which is mostly hard, yellow clay. There are, however, a few growers who are growing excellent stock in our vicinity.

In sizing up the situation, I believe that one of the most important factors is the selection of a proper location and the erection of suitable houses. An ideal location is on a south hillside, which is protected on the north and west by buildings or a heavy growth of timber. If this can not be obtained, any piece of ground that has an unobstructed southern exposure is acceptable. Where there is no protection from the north and west, of course the fuel consumption will be greater.

The Construction of the Houses.

The construction of the houses is, in the opinion of many growers, a most important factor. The principal thing is to obtain all the light possible during the winter months, when the crop is most valuable, and the growers of this vicinity are unanimous in their selection of wide, high houses, ranging from twenty-five to fifty feet wide. The majority favor houses thirty-five to forty feet wide, with sides seven to nine feet high, half of which should be glass which is used as ventilation. There are a few large detached houses built in this section, but those of the ridge and furrow type are more common, as they are cheaper to construct and I think give practically the same results. But the two-thirds and three-quarters span houses, with the long side to the south, are considered more desirable, as they give more light when it is needed most. These houses require slight shade during the hotter portions of the year. The high houses give a much better circulation of air, and a more uniform temperature can be maintained.

The heating of these large houses should be done by steam, as steam heat is more flexible than hot water heat and requires less piping. The principal objection to steam is that it requires constant attendance, but, as it is necessary to have a man to look after the heating plant of places of this size at all times, that objection is removed. Both low pressure and high pressure at the boiler, with reduction valves and steam traps, are used; the latter proves to be more economical, as a cheaper grade of fuel can be used.

The interior arrangement, the soil, etc., are too generally known to be discussed at this time, but one advantage of houses of the ridge and furrow type is a walk beneath the gutter, as that space is practically valueless for rose growing. The majority of growers use raised benches, about three feet from the ground, that height being most convenient for work on the benches.

The Varieties and Their Treatment.

As to the selection of varieties, the following are considered, by all the growers whom I have consulted, as being the most satisfactory: Killarney, White Killarney, Richmond, Maryland, Mrs. A. Ward, American Beauty and a few Ivory and Perles. Of these varieties, the first five named are grown extensively and give good results for three to four years, but it is much better to plant the Beauties and Perles every year. The young plants should be benched as soon after May 1 as possible, but, where replanting old plants, these can be moved as late as August with comparative safety. American Beauty plants are used by some growers, after they are taken from the benches, for pot plants for the following spring. They are planted out in the field, to be potted up and placed in coldframes in the fall and brought out and forced as needed during the winter and spring. They make good pot plants and demand a good price.

The insects and diseases which have given the most trouble are thrips, mildew, black spot, rose-leaf roller and green fly. Of these, thrips seem to have caused the most trouble. They are generally combated with nicotine in different forms, and one grower is getting results from the use of Paris green and brown sugar, used as a spray. Sulphur painted on the pipes is the chief method of treating mildew, while hand-picking is the best way of checking the black spot. Green fly is easily controlled by fumigating with nicotine preparations, and the leaf roller by the use of arsenic poisons. Hydrocyanic gas has not as yet been thoroughly tested, but I believe that where the houses are air-tight it will come into use in the future. Where the houses have many air-holes, the gas is wasted and will not give good results.

Outdoor Roses.

The growing of outdoor roses is divided into two classes, one for cut flowers commercially, and the other for home use. The cultivation is practically the same in both cases, except that where there are only a few roses grown, greater care in the preparation of the beds can be used than when growing in the fields in large numbers.

The varieties which are used for commercial purposes are naturally good for garden and home use, but there are a large number of additional varieties which prove quite satisfactory in the garden, though not valuable for the growing of cut flowers.

In growing roses in the open, the first thing to be considered is the location, as they must have the most light and sun possible, and, if possible, they should be protected on the north and west from the winter winds. It is best to plant them on the south side of a hedge, a building or other wind break. The land should be high and well drained, as the roses will not thrive in cold, wet soil. If the soil is inclined at all to be soggy, it is best to put in artificial drainage immediately, as it will be far less expensive, saving the loss of at least one year's time, than to wait and see if the plants will grow. In case the plants do not thrive the first year, it is well to immediately look into the conditions, as it is useless to continue under the same conditions.

Preparing a Garden Bed.

In preparing the ground for a rose bed, the soil should be removed to about two feet in depth and, if the subsoil is clay, the clay should be entirely removed and the drainage, if necessary, put in at that time. It can consist of broken brick, rock or other similar materials, or 4-inch clay tile with cinders which have weathered for a year or two, and should have an outlet to a drain or lower ground level.

The soil for filling the bed should be made up of about seventy-five per cent of good clay loam, five per cent of bone meal and twenty per cent of well rotted manure. This should be filled in to within six inches of the top and packed firmly, and the remainder of the bed should be filled with good loam, leaving out the fertilizers, as it is desired to have the plants make as deep a root growth as possible. Where the loam is extremely heavy, it is well to lighten it with sand or humus for the planting of the everblooming roses, especially the hybrid teas, but the hybrid perpetuals seem to prefer the heavy soil. As the roses in this locality should be planted as early in the spring as possible, it is best to prepare the bed the preceding fall, mounding it up to allow for settling of the loose soil, and moving the surplus in the spring.

Mixed Roses in a Japanese Straw Vase.

Planting in the Garden.

Hybrid perpetuals should be planted about two feet apart, but everblooming roses can be planted eighteen inches apart without crowding. However, if space permits, I prefer to have both kinds a little farther apart. When planting, the earth should be thoroughly packed around the roots, and the entire bed should be soaked with water. This applies to roses in the dormant state, but in planting roses of the evergreen type I much prefer plants which have been made from the cuttings the preceding August, kept growing during the winter and planted after the danger of severe frost. These plants should, if properly grown, be in 3-inch pots and should be given a large amount of loam the first year, and will become thoroughly established with little trouble. The plants should be kept cultivated until about June 1, when they should be mulched with about two inches of rotted horse manure or leaves, to retain the moisture during the hot months of the summer. The watering of roses during the summer is quite important and should not be done until absolutely necessary, and then a thorough soaking should be given, say about once a week, as light watering or sprinkling does more harm than good.

The insects which are most troublesome are the leaf roller and the green worm which eats out the buds, though the green fly sometimes becomes troublesome also, in wet weather. These pests are easily controlled, as before mentioned under greenhouse culture, with the exception of the worm which eats the buds, and which has to be picked off by hand.

Mulching and Pruning.

The care of roses during the winter months comprises a careful mulching with straw or leaves as soon as the ground is frozen, and the pruning, which is done in the spring. The pruning of roses is for the purpose of obtaining more or larger blooms, and as the flowers are borne on new wood produced from the current year's growth, all old wood should be cut away each year, except in the case of climbers and other tall growing sorts, where it is necessary to retain the old canes. These should be removed, one or two at a time, as new ones grow.

It is well to cut everblooming roses almost to the ground, as they give better results than when only lightly trimmed. As to the hybrid perpetuals, if it is desired to have a few large blooms, most of the canes should be removed to the ground and the remaining canes cut back about one-third, but if a large number of blooms are wanted, the canes should be practically all left, removing only a few of the older canes which are non-bearing.

The varieties used are governed by the use to which they are to be put. In cases where the owner goes away for the summer and does not come back until late fall, the hybrid perpetual roses are largely planted, but where the place is occupied the entire summer, and where the flowers are used for commercial purposes, the everblooming roses are used entirely, except in connection with shrubbery roots, where a few hybrid perpetuals are sometimes used with Rosa rugosa, which is classed among the shrubs.

Planting Field Roses.

Planting for commercial purposes is similar to garden culture, except that the ground is covered with manure, then plowed as deeply as possible and harrowed, instead of digging out and replacing the soil, as this process would be too expensive. The beds are usually made as long as possible, with about six rows of plants between the walks, thus giving the easiest manner of cultivation and gathering. The varieties which are commonly used for commercial cutting are Kaiserin, white and pink Cochet, Detroit and Mme. Grolez.

The best everblooming roses for garden use include the foregoing and, in addition, Antoine Rivoire, La France, Mrs. B. R. Cant, Gruss an Teplitz, Hermosa, Clothilde Soupert, Rhea Reid and Kaiserin. Among hybrid perpetuals are Paul Neyron, Mme. Masson, Clio, Boule de Neige, Anna de Diesbach, Eugene Furst, Frau Karl Druschki, Mrs. John Laing, Ulrich Brunner and Margaret Dickson. The best climbing roses are Dorothy Perkins, Crimson Rambler, White Dorothy Perkins and Alberic Barbier.

I have found that roses as a whole do not do well in St. Louis, owing to the fact that it is quite smoky, but that Rosa rugosa, which is used as a shrub, seems to do exceedingly well, no matter where it is placed or in what kind of soil. We do not use many of its varieties, confining ourselves principally to the Japanese type and the white variety.

Of the climbers, Dorothy Perkins and Crimson Rambler are most commonly used, Dorothy Perkins being the favorite, as Crimson Rambler becomes mildewed and looks quite shabby late in the summer.

In my capacity as landscape architect, I find that most people desire a rose bed somewhere on their premises, though few care to have a rose garden, as they deem it too much trouble.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Spiræas.

This is a good time to start a batch of such spiræas as Gladstone, compacta multiflora or astilboides. It will take ten or twelve weeks to flower them in a temperature of 55 degrees at night, but at 60 to 65 degrees, which they will stand and thrive in, they will be advanced fully two weeks. Plants wanted for Easter sales should not be started until February 10, in a night temperature of 60 degrees. This will bring them nicely in flower. If, however, the pink variety, Queen Alexandra, is wanted it should have a clear fortnight longer to bring it in season. Always remember, with the last named sort, that in order to retain its beautiful peach-pink color it should be kept in the shade while opening. Spiræas like a generous soil and, when growing, they can hardly be overwatered.

Marguerites.

Any marguerite plants now in 4-inch pots, if given a shift into 6-inch, will make excellent Easter plants. They should not be pinched after this time. A carnation temperature, 50 to 52 degrees at night, suits them. Larger plants which have their pots well filled with roots should have copious supplies of water and liquid manure; three times a week will not be any too often, as they are gross feeders. A batch of cuttings taken now, selecting shoots which are not forming flower buds, will make nice plants for Memorial day sales. Or, if preferred, they can be planted outdoors in May and lifted in September, and will make excellent Christmas plants.

Bougainvilleas.

Plants of Bougainvillea Sanderiana and B. Cypheri, the best two varieties for spring flowering, should now be taken from the cool house, where they have been resting, and started in a night temperature of 60 degrees. If the pots are rather small and much matted with roots, give them a shift, but not a large one. Many plants will need nothing more than a good top-dressing of fibrous loam and fine bone. Syringe the plants freely until growths start and give them an open, sunny bench all the time. As soon as plants which were not potted are nicely started into growth, feed regularly with liquid manure.

Double Feverfew.

The double feverfew is a useful cut flower for Memorial day trade. It is not much wanted at any other season, as its odor is rather too pronounced to be agreeable, but anyone who gets his benches of it right for Memorial day will net as much money on it as on any other crop he can grow. The plants should be benched sometime during the present month, and a cool house, 45 degrees at night, grows them best. Use any soil that will grow mums, violets or carnations.

Stocks.

It is a little early yet to sow stocks for Memorial day, but they are useful cut flowers at any time previous to that date. It will hardly pay, however, to grow them heavily. They are not wanted at all at Easter, and at other seasons, aside from Memorial day, the call for them is only moderate. White and pink Column are good early forcing varieties. Beauty of Nice, of a beautiful pink color, is perhaps the best seller of all. When well grown, this is a really superb variety. Early ten weeks is the strain mostly grown, especially for May flowering; the leading colors are white, pink and lavender, but for Memorial day trade the bright colors sell well. Sow the seeds in pans or flats of light soil and cover with sand. If you have any mice, cover the flats with glass until the seeds germinate, as mice are partial to them.

Lilies for Easter.

If your lily plants are only just through the soil, they will need a brisk and steady heat to flower them for Easter; 65 degrees at night is not too much. Any which are six to eight inches high are all right, and in a minimum temperature of 55 degrees they will be on time. It is better to do some forcing now rather than later, when the buds are formed. Remember, you should be able to see and count your flower buds by February 20, or you are late; so give all laggards a warm house, to send them along as rapidly as possible.

THAT THREE-NAMED ROSE.

Further regarding the article under the heading "That Three-Named Rose" in the issue of December 31, a contributor writes:

"There is not a shadow of doubt in my mind but that the rose in question is Antoine Rivoire; we have grown this rose as a bedder for a good many years and think that we know it pretty well; it is quite distinct from Prince de Bulgarie, which we also have had for some years. One thing is sure: anyone having a doubt as to the identity of his stock needs only to send to M. Pernet-Ducher, Lyons, France, for stock of these two sorts and he can readily verify his own. I think that it would be a serious mistake to send the rose to the trade under any but its own name, forming a bad precedent. Our Society of American Florists has gone on record from its inception emphatically against change of name. Only the raiser of a new variety, or the purchaser of a variety with privilege of naming, has the right to change its name."

SPIDER ON ROSES.

We are forwarding by mail under separate cover shoots of roses which are literally covered with webwork done by a small spider. We also send some of the spiders, which have been infesting two of our rose houses since early last fall. We are at a loss to know of a remedy which will exterminate the spider. On bright days they spin their webs over all the rose plants, and over and on everything in the houses, from the benches where the plants grow to the roof. The real damage is done to the buds, which are literally covered with the web and numberless small spiders, which binds the bud so tightly that they can not expand. Other than that we have not observed any damage. However, we are of the opinion that they injure the plants in general. Fumigating with tobacco and spraying with extracts of tobacco does not affect them at all. Perhaps some brother florist knows of a remedy. It will almost be impossible for us to use hydrocyanic acid gas, as our houses are connected with our heating plant, which requires the presence of our night fireman continuously in cold weather. F. F. C.

I do not know this pest. Perhaps some growers who have had it can suggest a remedy. Hydrocyanic acid gas would undoubtedly be the most likely fumigant to clear it out.

CARNATIONS

WEAK-STEMMED ENCHANTRESS.

Is there any way to strengthen the stems of Enchantress carnations, besides adding lime to the soil? Our blooms are magnificent, but the heads droop. Would a few degrees above 52 degrees, night temperature, cause spindling stems? V. A. A.

You are growing your Enchantress too warm. Drop the night temperature to 48 degrees. Lime is valuable for strengthening the stems, but growing them cooler will help the stems more than any top-dressings. C. W.

WASHINGTON.

Washington, the bright pink sport of Enchantress, A. T. Pyfer thinks will become one of the standard sorts; indeed, Mr. Pyfer says, there will be numerous growers who within the next few years will have nothing in their benches except the Enchantress varieties: Enchantress, White Enchantress and Washington.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph made in one of the greenhouses of the Chicago Carnation Co., at Joliet, Ill. Washington occupies the bench in the center of the house. The variety at the left is Princess Charming.

THRIPS AND WEAK STEMS.

I am sending under separate cover some carnations, and if you can tell me what causes them to act in this way, I shall be greatly obliged to you. I have given them, or some of them, two applications of ashes, and have also given them well-rotted cow manure. The stems, as you can see, are weak, and the flowers do not open right. They act as though they had been kept too warm. The soil is a compost of two-thirds prairie sod and one-third well-rotted manure. I am at a loss to know what to do. The soil seems to dry from the bottom of the bench up. Would that cause the trouble?

R. C. H.

The specimens forwarded were badly frozen, as might be expected in this severe cold spell. There were, however, unmistakable signs of thrips, and they are no doubt responsible for your blooms not opening properly. Directions for combating this pest have been given in these columns frequently this season. Nicotine applied in the most practical way is the thing to use. Fumigation, vaporizing and spraying are all good.

Your weak stems may be caused by more than one thing, and I am rather inclined to the opinion that they are. Your light prairie soil is probably too light, to begin with, and the addition of one-half as much manure would lighten it still more. A better proportion would be three or four to one. Dressing with wood ashes ought to strengthen the stems. Perhaps the main cause for your weak stems may be found in the prolonged cloudy weather. If you have not been particularly careful to give ventilation at every opportunity, and to hold the temperature down, you would likely have weak stems, regardless of the texture of the soil. When the prolonged cloudy spells set in, and the growth seems to stand perfectly still, the grower is tempted to put on a little extra heat to bring the blooms out. This is just the opposite of what should be done, and it usually results in a weak, soft growth and weak stems.

LEAN-TO FOR CARNATIONS.

We wish to build a small greenhouse with as little outlay of money as possible. We have a strong board fence running east and west, seven feet high, and propose to build a lean-to against the south side of this fence, seven feet high on the back, five feet in front (three feet solid and two feet of glass), fifteen feet wide, with two benches each five feet wide, a 2-foot walk between the benches and a 1½-foot walk along each side, ventilation in top and south side. Do you think we could successfully grow carnations in this house, or would you advise building a different one? We propose to build it about fifty feet long and put in 500 carnations, and the rest of the house in chrysanthemums.

W. S. G.

I think it would be a great mistake to build as you contemplate. Such a building would have some decidedly objectionable features which could not possibly be counterbalanced by the slight saving in cost. For instance, that high board fence on the north side would cast a shade, even though it were on the north side. Then, you would have only two feet drop in fifteen feet for the sashbars. With this pitch you could not possibly keep a tight roof. If you were to use a ridge, placing it about five feet south from the fence and about nine feet high, it would help matters some. But I would advise a new house, built properly, and you will be more likely to be satisfied with it in the future. A. F. J. B.

GARDENERS' ASSOCIATION.

The executive committee of the National Association of Gardeners held its first meeting since the organization obtained its charter at the Herald Square hotel, New York city, Friday, January 12. President Logan called the session to order at 3:30 o'clock. The invitation from Charles H. Totty, of the National Flower Show committee, inviting the National Association to coöperate with the Society of American Florists in the holding of the national show to be held in New York city in 1913, was acted on and a resolution was passed pledging the support of the National Association to the national show, it being decided that the National Association would not hold any exhibition of its own during the coming year and that its members should make every effort to produce fitting exhibits for the big show.

The invitation from President Sim, of the American Sweet Pea Society, was acted on and it was decided to hold a summer meeting in Boston at the time of the sweet pea show, as it is expected that many National Association members will be present at that time in competition for the liberal prizes which are offered by the Sweet Pea Society in the private gardeners' classes.

President Logan appointed the follow-

The duties of these committees are to provide suitable exhibits and papers at the executive meetings of the organization, which it was decided will be held quarterly. The next meeting will be held in Philadelphia at Horticultural hall, April 15.

Among those present were: Thomas W. Logan, Jenkintown, Pa.; John Shore, Harrison, N. Y.; John F. Huss, Hartford, Conn.; William Kleinheinz, Ogontz, Pa.; Carl Schaeffer, Tuxedo Park, N. Y.; M. C. MISSOURI BOTANICAL GARDEN.

H. C. Irish, superintendent of the Missouri Botanical Garden, at St. Louis, gave an interesting lecture before the Engelmann Botanical Club, of St. Louis, on "The New Range of Plant Houses to Be Erected at the Missouri Botanical Garden This Year." The houses are designed to compare with the largest exhibition houses of the world. They undoubtedly will be the first of the kind in this country. The various plans were shown, which enabled the members and visitors to get a clear interpretation of these massive houses for the cultivation of plants.

The range, as a whole, will be in the form of a quadrangle. The main houses will face the main entrance to the garden. The center house, which will be devoted to the cultivation of tropical palms, is 112 feet long, eighty feet wide and sixty feet high, the roof being of curvilinear architecture. The main entrance will approach the center house by an ornamental vestibule, artistically supported by a half dozen massive columns. Directly opposite this entrance, on the west, will be an exit somewhat similar to the entrance, only the visitors will be confronted by a formal garden, enclosed by the wings of the quadrangle.

The ends of the palm house, north and south, are ninety-four feet long, forty-seven feet wide and thirty-five feet high. This, included with the palm house, will give a frontage of 300 feet. Connected with the ends are the wings running west. These are 135 feet long, thirty-four feet wide and twenty-seven feet high and are divided into two sections. An interesting feature is the ground elevation, which is seven feet lower than the main houses. A series of steps will connect the houses, affording visitors an excellent view looking from the main houses through the wings.

The heating plant will be located about 400 feet north of the plant houses. Two steam boilers, each with a capacity of 100 horse-power, will be the medium for supplying the heat. These will be connected to the houses by means of a surface tunnel six feet wide and eight feet high.

The contract for these extensive conservatories is in the hands of the well known firm, Pierson U-Bar Co., of New York. The contract calls for the completion of the building by October 1, 1912.

After the lecture a series of lantern slides, picturing the greenhouses of Kew Gardens, London, were shown for comparison, by G. H. Pring, of the Missouri Botanical Garden. P. H. G.

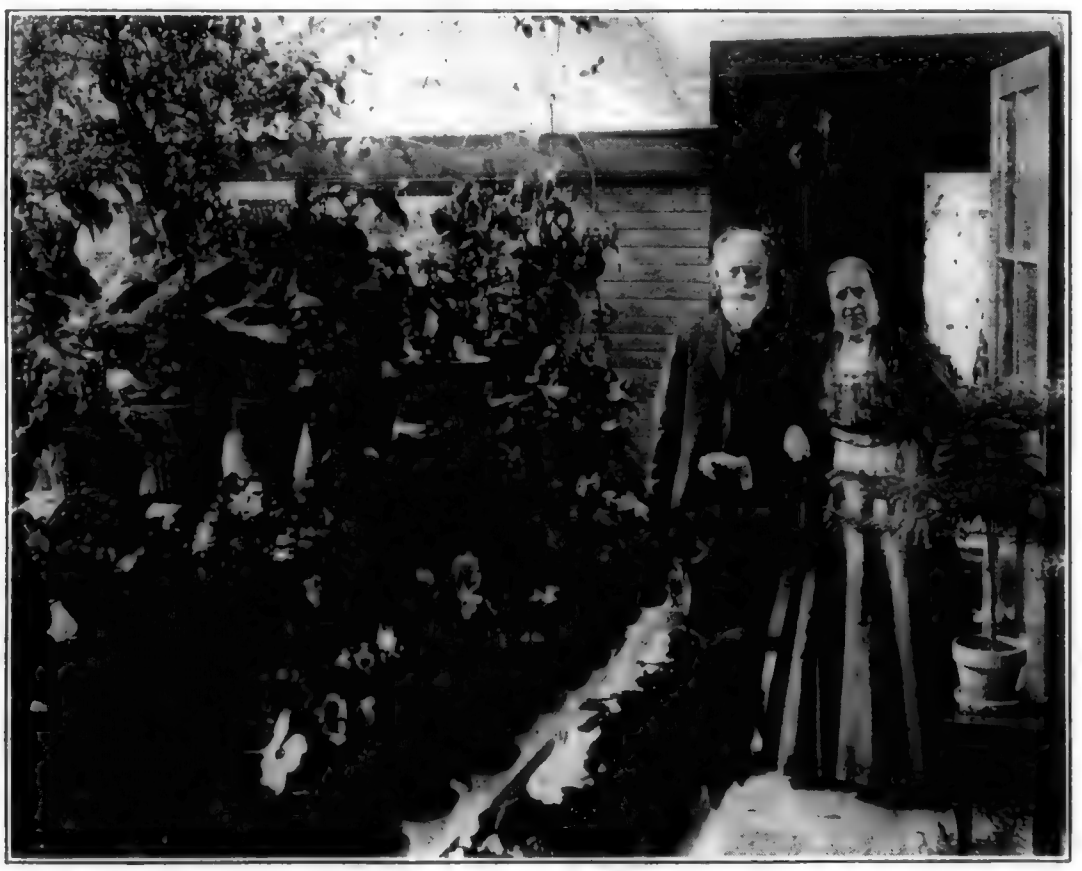
OBITUARY.

Joseph Stainel.

Joseph Stainel, aged 68 years, for several years a resident of Omaha, Neb., and Council Bluffs, Ia., and at one time owner of one of the largest florists' establishments in the Tri-Cities, was found dead on the morning of January 8, at 801 North Sixteenth street, Omaha, where he had been rooming for some time. He had been taken ill four days previously and had been confined to his room. No doctor attended him. When the chambermaid went into his room she found his lifeless body.

John Ralph.

John Ralph, one of the most successful florists of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., died January 7, at his home on Woodlawn avenue. His health had been somewhat impaired since the sudden death of his son, John I., several years ago. He had, however, been able to attend to business. Early this fall he suffered from an attack of pneumonia, and this greatly weakened him. About a week previous to his death his heart became affected.

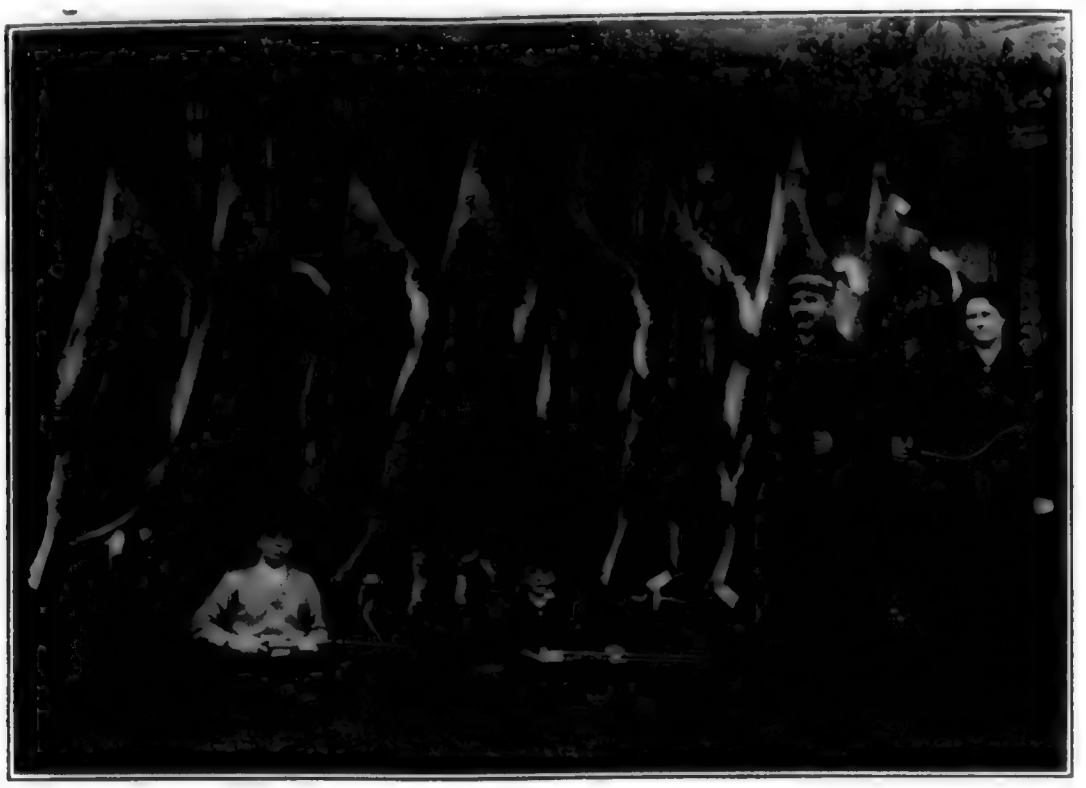


Mr. Ralph was a native of the township of Alice, Province of Ontario, Canada. Thirty-six years ago he moved to Saratoga Springs and almost immediately engaged in the florists' trade. He built up his at first small business by honest, upright methods, until he became one of the really substantial men of the village. He was a member of High Rock Council, No. 652, Royal Arcanum, and of the Immediate Relief Association of the council. He was also a member of the Albany Florists' Club. He is survived by his wife and three daughters, the Misses Mary, Katherine and Margaret, all of Saratoga Springs.

Thomas Galvin.

Thomas Galvin, one of the first men to establish a florist's business in Newport, R. I., died at his home in that city, Friday afternoon, January 12, at the advanced age of 86 years. He was born in Ireland, February 21, 1826, and came to America when only 10 years of age. He secured employment with a gardener on one of the big estates near New York and after a few years went into business for himself, later removing to Boston, and about sixty years ago took up his residence at Newport. He established a small florist's business, which grew until at his death he had an extensive place at the corner of Spring and Dearborn streets. His home was on the same property. He was twice married. His first wife was Mary Kelly, of Newport, and they had six children, of whom two survive. His second wife was Mary Nicholson, of New York, who survives with two daughters. He was uncle of Thomas Galvin, the widely known florist in Boston.

Thomas Molden.



Thomas Molden, one of the oldest and best known gardeners in Newport, R. I., died at Middletown, R. I., January 10. He was born in the county of Fermanagh, Ireland, October 28, 1838. He came to America in 1855, and shortly afterwards became a gardener's assistant on an estate at Haydensville, Mass. In 1863 he removed to Newport, where he was a gardener on prominent estates for many years. A year ago last October Mr. and Mrs. Molden celebrated their golden wedding. He leaves a widow and three sons.

IN HIS EIGHTY-FIRST YEAR.

The photograph here reproduced was taken in the conservatory of W. A. Lull, of New Berlin, N. Y., and shows Mr. and Mrs. Lull standing just inside the doorway. Their attitude in the picture seems particularly expressive of their feeling of mutual helpfulness and interdependence, which has undoubtedly increased steadily throughout their half century and more of married life, for they have just passed their fifty-fourth wedding anniversary. Mr. Lull is head of the firm of Lull & Pardee, dealers in plant food, plants, seeds and bulbs, as well as other articles of general merchandise. He is now in the eighty-first year of his life, and his advanced age and the condition of his health prevent his taking his former active part in business. The plants in the conservatory, he says, are mostly tuberous begonias, with bougainvillea branches extending across the roof.

THE MIGHTY HUNTERS.

In The Review of January 4 there appeared an illustration that showed the string of jack-rabbits an Indiana florist bagged on a day's hunting trip in Kansas. It is not at all with the desire to go the jack-rabbit gentleman one better that the accompanying illustration is presented, but for emphasizing the fact that the Warncke family is composed of mighty hunters. John H. Warncke is one of the leading florists of Detroit. Mrs. Warncke shoots no less unerringly than her husband, and the little Warnckes also know the mechanism of a rifle, and how to use it. The photograph from which the illustration was prepared was made at L'Anse, Mich., and shows the kill on a recent hunting expedition.

STATE NURSERY DINNER.

Though the mercury was 20 degrees below zero, it in no way checked the enthusiasm of the crowd that gathered at the home of T. E. Mills, the manager of the State Nursery Co., Helena, Mont., on the evening of December 28, 1911. The occasion was the annual dinner given by Mr. Mills to the employees of the State Nursery Co. Covers were laid for thirty. After several toasts were given and responded to, the rest of the evening was given to song and story. An amusing feature of the entertainment was the singing of a verse of song into a phonograph by each one present. Besides those sung in English, verses were sung in Highland Scotch, Irish, German, Swedish, French, Greek and Japanese. The records thus made will be preserved and from time to time reproduced for the edification of future generations. A flashlight photo of the diners was taken. J. P. R.

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y.

The annual meeting of the Southampton Horticultural Society was held in the Odd Fellows' hall, January 4. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, U. G. Ager; vice-president, Julius W. King; secretary, Benjamin C. Palmer; treasurer, A. McIntosh; financial secretary, Frank H. Smith; corresponding secretary, W. McLeod; executive committee, William Fitzpatrick, John Rennex, Martin McLaughlin and William McLeod. The treasurer and financial secretary read their reports, which showed the society to be in a prosperous condition. Two new members were elected, Donald Seaton, Southampton, and George Burnett, of New York. It was decided in future to hold an annual dinner some time in January. After business, the members sat down to an enjoyable supper provided by the refreshments committee. W. M.

GREENWICH, CONN.

The January meeting of the Westchester and Fairfield Horticultural Society was held in Greenwich, Conn., its new home for 1912, with President Stuart in the chair. In anticipation of the lecture on "Gardens of Japan," given by Mr. Farquhar, of Boston, 137 members were present, lacking only ten for a full attendance, which, considering the stormy night, with the thermometer flirting around zero, speaks volumes of the great esteem all have for Mr. Farquhar, as well as the interest each has in the welfare of the society.

Two members were elected and seven applications received. The judges for the night were Messrs. McKenzie, Adcock, Magee, Tealey and Addor, and their decisions were as follows:

President Stuart's prize for vase of carnations was won by R. Stobo, with White Enchantress, and a vote of thanks was accorded to all others competing for the prize, as all were really prize-winners.

Certificate of merit to James Stuart for a fine specimen of Begonia Agatha.

Cultural certificate to James Stuart for a grand vase of Euphorbia jacquiniæflora.

Cultural certificate to James Aitchison for a splendid vase of stocks, Beauty of Nice.

An exhibit of geraniums and begonias by Harry Wild was highly commended.

Honorable mention to Ad. Paterson, for fine blooms of Eucharis Amazonica.

Vote of thanks to J. Aitchison, for a well finished specimen of chorizema, also to Th. Ryan, for display of marguerites and vegetables.

HEADING BACK BOX ELDERS.

One of my customers has a hedge of box elder, ten to twelve feet high, which has never been cut back. Would this time of the year be a good time to cut it back, or what time would be best? Here, in North Dakota, we have zero weather every day at this season. R. O.

The heading back can be done any time before growth starts, but it is better to select a day when the wood is not frozen. C. W.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Incorporated by Act of Congress, March 4, 1901.
Officers for 1912: President, R. Vincent, Jr., White Marsh, Md.; vice-president, August Poehlmann, Morton Grove, Ill.; secretary, John Young, Bedford Hills, N. Y.; treasurer, W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, N. Y.
Annual convention, Chicago, Ill., August 20 to 23, 1912.

RESULTS.

We give them. You get them.

We both have them.

NOT a few subscribers save themselves the bother of annual renewal by sending The Review $2, $3, or sometimes $5, instead of the dollar-bill that insures fifty-two visits of the paper.

JANUARY is an excellent month for pushing along on the collections. Get everyone who owes you to pay at least something on account—and then do the same by those whom you owe.

HAVE you noted that the character of men employed on the successful, progressive places has improved in marked degree in the last few years? Prize-winning, money-making stock is not grown by unskilled labor.

THE S. A. F. board of directors, at the Detroit meeting last week, received an education in the matter of metropolitan rents. The society at present is negotiating for two big halls, one at Chicago for the trades' display in August and one at New York for the National Flower Show of 1913. After listening to the terms for the Grand Central Palace, New York, the price of the Coliseum at Chicago seems quite picayunish.

ORDERS COST TWO PER CENT.

Every now and then an advertiser reports that there has been no response to his offer in the Classified department, and wants to be told why. We wish we knew. Sometimes, of course, the stock offered is out of season, but in most cases that appears to make little difference; everything is seasonable somewhere in this big country, and The Review goes everywhere. Usually the report of those who offer small surpluses in the Classified department is like this:

My last adv., costing 60 cents, brought orders that amounted to $35.—Clark W. Brown, Ashland, Mass., January 6, 1912.

HAIL SCREEN OVER GLASS.

Having had the misfortune last summer to lose all our glass and plants, as well as all other crops, by hail, we are contemplating protecting them by wire netting this spring, and would ask through The Review if any of the readers of The Review could give us any information as to the best methods. We have several plans of doing the job, but would be thankful to any of our folks who may have some experience and could give us advice in the matter. We have two houses, connected, each 32x200 feet, and intend to stretch the wire across the two houses, keeping it twelve inches or more above the glass; or is there a better way of doing it?

Lethbridge, Alta. Frache Bros.

VAPOR ON STORE WINDOWS.

The Review of December 14, page 33, contained an inquiry in regard to vapor on store windows, with a reply by H. S. Agreeing with the Greeks of old, H. S. says in the last paragraph that "water is the best." The idea occurred to me that it might be practicable to run a small perforated water pipe along the top of the window, on the inside. The perforations could be quite small and some four to six inches apart. The pipe would be set so that a small stream could be run down the inside of the window, and drainage or an outflow could be arranged at the bottom of the window. This might be made to work merely by turning on or shutting off a faucet, as the case might be. This, of course, is only an untried suggestion, which I pass along for consideration.

Arthur E. Chilman.

JERUSALEM CHERRY FROM SEED.

When should the seeds of Jerusalem cherry be planted? How long does it take the seeds to germinate? Is there any special care that should be given the plants? I am located in southern New Hampshire. S. E. P.

The present month or early in February is a good time to sow Jerusalem cherries, Solanum Capsicastrum. Sow in pans of leaf-mold and sand, in a warm house. They will germinate within two weeks and need no special care. Pot off singly when of sufficient size and plant outdoors, in your latitude about May 20. Dig up and repot them about the middle of September. Field culture will give you much finer plants than pot culture. C. W.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

There has been no respite from the severely cold weather, which has now prevailed uninterruptedly for nearly three weeks. Only on one day in the first fortnight of the new year did the temperature fail to go below zero. It has been a stretch of unfavorable weather breaking all records. For the first few days the market got along fairly well, but within the last week there has been a marked falling off in the out-of-town business, which was the chief sustaining factor. It has been so cold that the flower business has been confined to two classes of trade: funeral work and telephone trade. In other words, the necessities have been represented by the demand for funeral flowers, while the luxuries have been reflected in the orders that came to the retailers by phone. Some of the largest buyers of stock have little funeral trade and less telephone trade, and their demands have been extremely light ever since the first of the year. The severe weather has been general throughout the territory that draws its supplies from Chicago, and the same conditions have prevailed in all the towns that use Chicago flowers. Business not only has been light, but trains have been so delayed that there was no certainty when stock would arrive, and losses by freezing were frequent. The result has been that many standing orders have been canceled and telegraph orders are less numerous than usual. What business there is comes in rushes, followed by complete stagnation.

There has been an abundance of stock. Practically the only flowers that have been in demand above the supply have been short roses. There have been enough long roses so that everyone has been supplied, but more short white roses might easily have been used. Beauties have been equal to all demands and prices have been weakening. Carnations have come in more plentifully than roses and the wholesalers have had some difficulty in effecting a clearance. Recently red was in special demand, but now the principal call is for white, though no fancy prices are paid.

While carnations have been in large supply with practically all the houses, some of them have found their principal difficulty in moving the violets. The weather has been so severe that the wearers of violets have not been moving about. Any sort of a clean-up at straight prices has been impossible, and average returns to the growers have been extremely low. Many frozen shipments of Rhinebeck stock have been a complete loss. Sweet peas have come in much more abundantly and have in a measure shared the predicament of the violets, since the two flowers have much the same uses. The quality is better than ever before at this date and the quantity is larger.

Some tulips with really good stems now are offered. Jonquils are abundant. Paper Whites are passing, their season having been brief this year, but there are plenty of Romans. Freesia is equal to all calls. Valley is abundant. Easter lilies are again in large supply. Stevia is about out of the market, its duration having been less than usual this season, but its sale considerably better than a year ago. Some fine mignonette now can be had.

The green goods market is quiet, so quiet, in fact, that special bargains are offered to move galax and boxwood.

Losses by Gas Leakage.

Every time there comes a severely cold spell there are reports of loss through illuminating gas filtering into greenhouses from broken mains. The ground is frozen so solidly that there is no outlet for the gas until it works its way to a greenhouse that has kept the soil open. W. L. Palinsky is the heaviest loser so far reported this cold spell. He found his place full of gas Sunday, January 14, and soon located the broken pipe, in the street ten feet from his wall. He puts his loss at $1,500, the stock in all five of his houses being affected. He has filed a claim with the gas company, although others who have had similar experiences have found it impossible to collect damages.

A. T. Eichel, proprietor of the greenhouses at 4228 North Fortieth avenue, found gas in his place January 8. He notified the gas company and was told that it was sewer gas. After laying open the sewer he did the same thing for the gas pipe in the street and found the source of the mischief. His loss is not large.

Miss Pearce to Wed.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Carrie Pearce and G. Tegelaar, no date for the wedding having been set. Miss Pearce is the daughter of Sam J. Pearce, widely known in the trade as the largest forcer of miscellaneous bulbs for the Chicago market. Mr. Tegelaar is the American representative of two of the large European firms of bulb growers, C. J. Speelman & Sons, of Sassenheim, Holland, and La Garde & Speelman, Ollioules, France.

cold weather lasts. The fuel shortage also is becoming acute with some of those who do not usually employ the hand-to-mouth policy. Some of the growers never have much coal on hand and always are in trouble as soon as railroads are blockaded, but this time the blockade has lasted more than two weeks and gives no sign of breaking. Many of the large growers have not received a single car of coal in from two to three weeks, although numerous cars are on the road. Warmer weather is predicted now by the government weather bureau and is urgently needed.

Various Notes.

J. F. Wilcox and wife, of Council Bluffs, have been in town several days, in consultation with Dr. Billings with regard to the health of Mrs. Wilcox, which has not been good.

The growers at Evanston are having trouble because their chimneys smoke. Fines have been imposed, but suspended for thirty days to give the growers a chance to put in smoke consuming devices.

John Poehlmann says roses have cleaned up much better than carnations during the cold weather, but that the continued cold means a steady loss, as there is stock for considerably more business than has been moving. He looks for no real scarcity at any time this season.

J. F. Kidwell & Bro., on Wentworth avenue, lost two houses of spring stock by frost one night last week.

W. P. Kyle, of Kyle & Foerster, says the greatest difficulty that has come as the result of the cold weather has been in getting the eastern violets through safely.

John Klehm and wife, of Arlington Heights, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary January 11. There was a large gathering of friends and neighbors. The couple has three sons, George, Charles and Henry, all engaged in pushing along the work of Klehm's Nursery.

John Steinmetz appears to have prospered since starting in the retail field, at 1643 North Halsted street, for he has just placed an order for a touring car for March delivery.

Wietor Bros. say they did not receive any coal at all during the first two weeks of the year, five cars arriving January 15. In the interval a big hole was made in the stock on hand, which amounted to nearly seventy-five cars.

W. H. Hilton purposes to sell his Sixty-third street store, that he has run for thirteen years. He has another store at Fifty-third and Jefferson and is going strongly into confections and catering.

Fire which started from an overheated stove in a barn at the rear of the home of John Jensen, 7506 Euclid avenue, January 13, cremated over 200 chickens and caused a loss of $2,000. Jensen, who is a florist at 1929 East Seventy-first street, saved his automobile, valued at $3,000.

Hoerber Bros. say they burned 1,600 tons of coal last season, but that it will go 2,000 tons this season, as a result of the long stretch of zero weather.

The Weather.

The weather during the last week put all talk of business out of the florist's mind. He had all he needed in keeping his greenhouses from freezing and himself warm. Some idea of the extremes may be had from the following temperatures reported, each below zero: Schenley conservatories, 10; Highland park, 17; Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., Bakerstown, 16; Chas. Koenig, Millvale, 24; Wm. Leith, Butler, Pa., 32. Tuesday night the temperature was around the zero point, but the wind was the worst ever felt here with such a low temperature and gave the greenhouse men the time of their lives and something to talk about for a long time. S. J. Hatch, of Allison Park, Pa., so far as known was the only one injured to any extent and from reports he simply froze up, everything being lost except some orchids which he managed to pack and get over to Westhoff's greenhouses.

There are a number of reports of frozen boxes of Beauties, violets, lilies and other flowers, but, taken altogether, the trade got through luckily.

Various Notes.

Edw. McCallum, of the McCallum Co., has the sympathy of his host of friends in the loss of his wife. Mrs. McCallum, who had been ill for some time, came home from the hospital just before New Year's and seemed to be getting along nicely until Saturday, January 6, when other complications set in which resulted in her death Saturday, January 13. Mrs. McCallum was in her twenty-fourth year and was a woman of delightful character and while of a retiring disposition was dearly loved by all who had the privilege of her acquaintance. She leaves, besides her husband, twin boys, 7 weeks old.

The extreme cold and other circumstances prevented the Pittsburgh people from attending the convention at Detroit, but we had several who stopped off on their way home, among them Wm. Craig, Mr. Berger, of Berger Bros., S. S. Pennock and Mr. Heacock, who braved the zero weather to make a trip to the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co.'s plant at Bakerstown. Hoo-Hoo.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

The prolonged severely cold weather, which has been with us since the first of the year and which was the worst since the establishment of the local weather bureau, has laid the flower business flat on its back. It is quite fortunate that it also reduced the supply to a considerable extent, for the demand is far from satisfactory. There have been plenty of good carnations to meet all demands, while the supply of roses has been about equal to the calls. Valley has not moved, while the sale of violets has been at a complete standstill. There is no trouble in getting bulbous stock at any time. Beauties are the one item that is scarce, but there are few calls. Lilies are of good quality and not overabundant.

Various Notes.

H. V. Hunkel, Nic Zweifel and C. C. Pollworth were the only ones who attended the Detroit convention. Messrs. Pollworth and Zweifel returned January 13, while Mr. Hunkel took a side trip to Richmond, Ind., where he says he received a cold reception, for it was 25 degrees below zero. That Milwaukee grown stock still cuts some figure was proven, inasmuch as Mr. Zweifel and the C. C. Pollworth Co. captured some first prizes. In all they say it was a fine affair, including the hospitality for which the Detroiters are famous.

The cold weather of the last week will long be remembered by John Dunlop, of Wauwatosa. While confined to his bed through sickness, leaving the firing in charge of inexperienced help, Mr. Dunlop's place was completely frozen up.

January 12, while the thermometer registered 18 degrees below zero, the hot water boiler of the east range of the Wm. Edlefsen plant, at North Milwaukee, sprung a bad leak and in less than no time, in spite of the heroic efforts of all present, the best part of the stock was frozen. This section contained bedding stock, stevias, azaleas and various bulbs. Little was saved.

The Holton & Hunkel Co. says violets did not sell as readily for the charity ball this year as on former occasions.

As no quorum was on hand January 5 for the monthly meeting of the Florists' Club, President Hunkel decided to combine it with the February meeting.

J. E. Matthewson, of Sheboygan, Wis., joined the Milwaukee boys on the Detroit trip.

L. S. Spencer, of Champaign, Ill., was a visitor last week.

J. M. Fox & Son again had the decoration for the charity ball, held

The Gust Rusch Co. says that last week many of the consignments received were more or less frosted.

The automobile of the C. C. Pollworth Co. caught fire January 12, while bringing in the morning's stock, and there was great excitement in the neighborhood of Thirty-fifth street and Grand avenue. Most of the stock that was not burned was frozen. E. O.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The zero weather that prevailed during the first half of this week affected supply and demand. The supply was reduced and the demand almost annihilated, excepting in the fashionable shops, which were busy sometimes but not always. Such cold weather has rarely been known in this city, the thermometer registering unheard-of numbers of degrees below zero on three successive mornings, January 12 to 14. Prices have changed but little, only the dull condition of the market makes the average returns less than they have been. The corsage flowers have suffered more than any other; next to them the poor grades, usually jobbed off to the street merchants. Street merchants don't do business in arctic weather, so the culls accumulated. There are no other special features in the market, barring a reduction in supply and generally unsatisfactory conditions in every department of flowerdom.

Pennsylvania Society Schedule.

The following schedule for the season of 1912 has been issued by the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society:

Spring exhibition, March 19 to 21.

Peony exhibition, late in May or early in June.

Outdoor rose and sweet pea exhibition in June.

Dahlia exhibition, September 17.

Annual flower show, November 5 to 8.

Philadelphia at Detroit.

The wonderful showing made by the Philadelphia rose growers at the national convention of the American Rose Society in Detroit last week is the subject of much comment in trade circles here. It is generally known that Philadelphia produces good roses, but it is not generally known that the roses grown in the neighborhood of this city are of such excellence as to rival all other sections of the country combined. Following is a list of the prize-winning exhibitors and the varieties for which they received prizes:

John R. Andre, Doylestown, first on twenty-five White Killarney.

Adolph Farenweld, Hillside, second on 200 square feet of cut roses.

Joseph Heacock Co., Wyncote and Roelofs, first on fifty Killarney; second on twenty-five Killarney.

Myers & Samtman, Wyndmoor, first on fifty Double Pink Killarney; first on twenty-five Double Pink Killarney; first on fifty Hilda; second on twenty-five Maryland; second on twenty-five Beauties; third on fifty Beauties.

Stockton & Howe, Princeton, N. J., Montgomery cup for best American rose not yet in commerce, also $25 cash prize, on Rose Princeton, scoring eighty-seven points.

The Fuel Market.

Smith, Lineaweaver & Co. say that owing to the extraordinarily cold weather that has prevailed throughout the country for the last ten days or more, the demand for anthracite coal is far beyond the supply. Prices are at full circular, and on many sizes at a premium. The steam sizes are hard to get and prices are high. It is with great difficulty that deliveries of any consequence are made. The bitterly cold weather has reduced the output at all the mines to less than half of what is ordinarily shipped, and it is probably safe to assume that all consumers of coal are using about twice as much as they ordinarily do. Taking the reduced output, together with the increased consumption, it is plainly evident that anthracite coal for some time to come will be very strong, and deliveries slow. With the snow storms, the matter of transportation is greatly hampered.

On the question of bituminous coal, owing to the larger tonnage mined, which is about six times that of anthracite, the situation is not so bad, but it is extremely difficult to have any prompt deliveries made, and prices are strong; in fact, the bituminous trade generally for the last few weeks has been better than in a long time, which shows a better business condition generally.

Various Notes.

John L. Ratcliffe, of Richmond, Va., was here recently.

J. D. Eisele, vice-president of the Henry A. Dreer corporation, cabled his safe arrival at Plymouth, England, January 10.

William J. Baker is recovering from a serious fall on the ice on the evening of January 8. Mr. Baker's physician tells him that his excellent physical condition has enabled him to withstand the serious shock safely.

Morris Hoffman, with Alfred M. Campbell, has been on the jury for the last two weeks.

Paul Berkowitz received a letter asking that "your silent salesman call, as I want to see him."

The delegation that went from this city to Detroit last week were John R. Andre, John Berger, William P. Craig, E. J. Fancourt, Adolph Farenwald, James W. Heacock, Joseph S. Myers, Leo Niessen, Samuel S. Pennock, Robert Pyle, I. Rosnosky, Martin Samtman, S. S. Skidelsky and Edward A. Stroud.

Walter P. Stokes has returned to work after two weeks' absence, owing to illness.

The glass market is in even more attractive condition from a buyer's standpoint than it was a year ago.

The reëlection of Adolph Farenwald to the presidency of the American Rose Society pleases the street.

Harry Jones, with J. J. Habermehl's Sons, at the Bellevue-Stratford, is quick-witted. A visitor in search of a bar, already in a decidedly wet condition, was politely shown by Mr. Jones to the fire-tower. Each ascending step rang a bell that quickly brought the hotel detectives.

John Berger, Leo Niessen and Samuel S. Pennock are unanimous in their praise of the rose show at Detroit. Mr. Berger was pleased with the favorable reception given Princeton. Mr. Niessen thought the flowers shown of a uniformly high character, while Mr. Pennock was particularly gratified by the good showing made by the new varieties he has espoused. Phil.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

There was quite a good market last week, but the cold weather, with a great deal of snow, put a damper on the transient business, especially among the downtown florists; among the uptown florists the telephones were working overtime. In the way of social work there was little going on, and the only thing that kept the florists busy some days was funeral work.

The wholesale men say that stock was by no means plentiful and that they cleaned up pretty well each day on first-class stock, with the prices not so high. The top price on roses was $10 per hundred, and on carnations it was $4. Violets brought 75 cents and with these the market is well supplied. Valley, Paper Whites and Romans also are plentiful, at the usual prices. The last week also found a good demand for smilax, asparagus and other greens.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club's first meeting in the new year was held Thursday afternoon, January 11. The cold weather and snow storm, which were quite severe, kept many away from the meeting, especially the suburban members, who generally outnumber the city attendants. President Windler opened the meeting at 3 o'clock, with only ten members present.

There was a general discussion on the Christmas business. There was to have been a paper read on "Christmas Plants," by Jules Bourdet, but Mr. Bourdet could not be present.

The members were much interested in the election of the head of the Chicago Florists' Club. In answer to a telegram from Secretary Beneke, Secretary Pyfer announced that Philip Foley had been elected and the news was well received by the members. The members approved the appointment of Fred H. Weber as state vice-president by President Vincent of the S. A. F.

It was voted to hold an officers' meeting in the latter part of the month, to arrange for an interesting program for the February meeting. The rest of the evening was taken up with interesting discussions from the question box. The next meeting of the club will take place Thursday afternoon, February 8.

Various Notes.

David Geddes, who for some years was with the M. M. Ayres Floral Co., has severed his connection with that firm and is now in the employ of F. H. Weber, on Maryland avenue. Mr. Weber has contracted to furnish the decorations and bouquets for the midwinter graduating class of the McKinley high school.

Franklin L. Ridgely, formerly park commissioner and well known in the local trade, has been confined to his home with pneumonia, but is now convalescing and is said to be out of danger.

Joe Windler, lately with the M. & O. railroad, is now with his brother, R. J. Windler, at 2300 South Grand avenue. They have had a good run of trade since the holidays.

Miss Anna Bernhardt, well known in local trade circles, is now in the employ of the Metropolitan Floral Co., at Grand avenue and Olive street.

Miss M. S. Newman had a great deal of elaborate work in funeral designs last week, having the family order for the late Samuel Copples, a retired capitalist.

The firm of Werner Bros. is supplying the local market with a fine lot of cut roses, which are handled by the W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co. George Schmidt has charge of the big rose houses.

Fire last week destroyed the private greenhouses of Joseph Peters, president of the Peters Furniture Co. The houses contained a valuable collection of cacti, said to be second only to that of the Missouri Botanical Garden.

The local seed houses, among them being the St. Louis Seed Co., the Schisler-Corneli Seed Co., the Schisler Grain Co., the Tinsley Seed Co. and Young & Sons Co., have started preparations for handling the big spring demand for seeds. All of them say they had a splendid trade in fall and winter bulbs.

The cold weather of last week tested the capacity of the boilers of our local growers, and some of the smaller growers out in the country lost part of their stock by freezing. The lowest temperature was 17 degrees below zero. Some of the retailers also suffered a loss, as the plants in their show windows were frozen.

Trustee Frank A. Weber, of the Florists' Club, who since January 1 has been traveling in the east in the interest of his firm, the N. J. Weber & Sons Nursery Co., writes that he will be back next week. J. J. B.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Severely cold weather, reduced cut flower supplies, quite a few frozen shipments and only a moderate demand were the features of last week's market. During low temperatures, particularly with icy streets and sidewalks, people will not come out to the stores and buy, and trade suffers. There has been no glut of anything, as flowers have opened slowly, yet but for funeral work the market would have been weak. Rose prices on all grades remain much the same. White Killarney has been considerably sought after. Among the newer roses Radiance, Harry Kirk and Prince de Bulgarie are proving popular, as is Mrs. Waddell. Carnations keep about the same. Sweet peas are of superb quality and have been selling rather better. Violets have not been so plentiful, but are enough for demands.

Dutch bulbous stock is not yet plentiful. Short yellow trumpet narcissi, such as Sir Watkin, have appeared, in addition to Golden Spur, Trumpet Major and Emperor, but are not yet plentiful. All colors of tulips are now obtainable. Paper Whites and Roman hyacinths continue abundant. Callas and Easter lilies have shortened up owing to the cold weather, also lily of the valley, which has sold somewhat better. Mignonette and antirrhinum are each now of excellent quality. Freesias are fine, especially Purity, which far outsells the older refracta alba. Of pansies the sale is only moderate. Of stevia there is still an abundance, but this will soon be finished. Marguerites, as usual, are among the best sellers on the market. Small supplies of sweet sultan, bachelor's buttons, primroses, violets and forget-me-not are seen among miscellaneous flowers. Cattleya Trianæ is now in good crop and selling well. Gardenias are good, but the severe weather has affected their sale. Asparagus is in good demand. Pot plant trade is almost at a standstill, owing to the intense cold.

Various Notes.

The J. A. Budlong Co., of Auburn, R. I., has 250,000 feet of glass, chiefly devoted to rose culture. John Pritchard is the able manager. Carnations have been dropped and Asparagus Sprengeri fills the houses they formerly occupied. W. E. Glidden is the salesman at the Boston Flower Exchange and handles an immense quantity of roses. Just now Killarney and White Killarney are extra good, as is Richmond. Other varieties noted were Harry Kirk, yellow; Lady Hillingdon, Radiance, Maryland, Cardinal and the so-called Mrs. Taft. The company has a splendid type of White Killarney, which gives no bullheads in winter and is pure in color.

At McMulkin's, on Boylston street, last week some excellent Prunus triloba and bougainvilleas were noted, also grand azaleas of specimen size.

Thomas Capers, of Wellesley Hills, grows remarkably fine Queen carnations, equal to the average White Enchantress, of which he also grows a good many. Other favorites are Beacon and Fenn. His pick is all handled by his son, H. T. Capers, at the Boston Coöperative Flower Market.

F. H. Houghton, of Park street, had the decorations, which were quite elaborate and artistically arranged, for the Sias-Prest wedding January 10. Palms, wild smilax and hundreds of superb, long-stemmed Beauty roses were used, the latter the pick of the Waban Conservatories' cut. Mr. Houghton has a large and growing trade at his new store, which is always arranged with exceedingly good taste.

William Nicholson, owing to sickness, was unable to make the Detroit trip, as hoped. I am pleased to report him much better.

George E. Buxton, of Nashua, N. H., a noted carnation specialist, is in the market with superb mignonette, which Thomas Pegler finds a quick sale for.

Noted in H. R. Comley's always interesting window last week were anthuriums, Polypodium Mandaianum, received weekly from the introducer and proving popular; clivias, yellow sweet sultan and the dark form of Dendrobium Phalænopsis.

J. T. Butterworth has been on the sick list, but a trip to the various orchid establishments near New York has braced him up. He is cutting a grand crop of Cattleya Trianæ.

Don't forget the ladies' night of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club January 23. The noted Emmanuel Church quartette and other noted entertainers are engaged, and there will be the usual collations and sundry other attractions. J. Otto Thilow, of Philadelphia, will give a stereopticon lecture at the February meeting, which will be kept also as carnation night.

Fred Sly, grower for W. B. Goode-now, the Stoughton violet specialist, will go into business for himself the coming spring at South Stoughton. He will build as a starter a semi-iron house 35 x 150 feet, and will install a Burnham boiler. Violets will be his specialty.

E. A. BEAVEN, - EVERGREEN, ALA.

Always mention the Florists' Review when writing advertisers.

He is, however, shipping a really superb lot of Beacon and Pink Delight carnations to the Boston Coöperative Market.

At Penn's, on Bromfield street, business always seems brisk. Even the late severe cold wave did not seem to cause any slackening. They are showing some splendid Lilium auratum, cattleyas, gardenias and Beauties, and are, as usual, strong on Princess violets.

William T. Walke, of Salem, is shipping to the local markets his usual fine lot of cyclamens and primulas.

Harry F. Woods, of Brookline, and H. F. Calder, of Norwood, are successful double violet specialists, whose flowers this season are of excellent quality.

January is energetically endeavoring to make amends for December's extreme mildness. January 13 was the coldest day Boston has had in four years. The day temperatures have ruled unusually low during the whole of the cold wave. What with frozen shipments and the steady depletion of the coal supplies, florists will be pleased to see milder weather.

W. R. Morris, of Wellesley Hills, is shipping a splendid lot of Killarney and White Killarney to B. J. McGinty at the Boston Coöperative Market.

Noted in Carbone's windows last week were some fine hybrid amaryllises. Among a host of other subjects, some beautiful ericas and camellias were to be seen.

Charles Rapp, of Melrose Highlands, is cutting some good Cattleya Trianæ in addition to callas and carnations.

Adolph E. E. Koch has a constant call for his pink snapdragon and has one order for cut flowers for Michigan each week.

Edward J. Ahern, of Wellesley, is strong on yellow marguerites at present.

John McFarland, of North Easton, thinks highly of the double poinsettia, P. pulcherrima plenissima. It requires earlier propagation and rather more heat to be in good shape for Christmas. He says he never knew valley to develop so slowly as during the recent cold wave.

The William E. Doyle Co., on Boylston street, are having excellent business. They have among other plants just now some fine metrosideros and new azaleas.

A. G. Lake, of Wellesley Hills, continues to find the old Queen and Fair Maid carnations as good money makers as any today.

The Detroit conventionists, most of whom returned this week, report a delightful time in spite of the cold wave and snow storms which accompanied them throughout their entire trip.

Smoke from a destructive fire on Federal street January 9, not far from the Devonshire street emporium of Welch Bros., did considerable damage to the large stocks of ribbons, artificial flowers, etc., in the basement. They were fortunately covered by insurance. This will not interfere with Messrs. Welch's shipping trade, however.

Frank T. White, of Holbrook, has some of the best grown Chinese primulas we have seen this season.

The last mums of the season, some nice pink ones, appeared at the Boston Flower Exchange January 10. They were from Peirce Bros., who have now in addition some fine cyclamens and azaleas.

Danville, Ill.—The boiler house at the greenhouses of the Danville Floral Co., at Central Park, was destroyed by fire early on Sunday morning, January 7. H. A. Dubuis is proprietor. The loss is said to have been partly covered by insurance.

Canandaigua, N. Y.—Edward Sick is well pleased with the season's business. His carnations were in full crop just when needed and Enchantress was never better. He is willing to pay a good figure for the variety that will beat this old favorite.

The Market.

The quiet that usually follows the storm has come over us. Everything is unusually dull, and, except for an occasional funeral or a dinner decoration, business would be at a standstill. The gradually lengthening days seem to be having an effect on stock. Carnations are arriving in larger numbers and, on account of the lack of demand, prices have fallen. Mrs. C. W. Ward is a favorite and in constant demand. With us, as yet, it has no variation of color, no streaks or different shades, as it is reported to have in the east. Its keeping qualities are excellent, and it makes a good stem and a large flower. Many growers are planning for an increased number next season.

American Beauties, long-stemmed, are in good crop, although many of the flowers are poor. Medium and short grades are rather scarce, but in some instances, rather than lose a sale, long Beauties that have opened a little have been cut down to suit the customer's purse. Tea roses run about as usual. Killarneys, both pink and white, seem to be gradually losing favor because they do not keep. They have but little substance and wilt after a little exposure. About the only roses that are grown are Richmond, the Killarneys, white and pink, and a few Chatenays. One rarely sees anything else. The growers say that novelties do not pay.

The violet men are discouraged. Violets can be bought at 50 cents a hundred, and it hardly pays to pick and bunch them at that price. A shipment of violets recently received from New York came through in elegant condition, but the fragrance had left them. They were two or three times as large as ours.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Every department of the cut flower business in New York suffered seriously last week because of the extremely cold weather, no such prolonged season of zero temperature having been experienced here for forty years. All through the week stock came to the market badly frozen. This was especially noticeable Saturday night, when many delayed shipments of violets arrived in bad condition. The street merchants for weeks have been under cover and the market has had no relief from this source. Even the department stores have been comparatively deserted. It is fortunate the receipts of stock were not greater.

Of roses there is a sufficiency, and the quality of stock arriving, from Beauties and the new varieties to Maids and Brides, is seldom excelled. Beauties hold steady at $6 per dozen for the best grade in quantity. Hillingdon, Ward and Prince de Bulgarie grow in favor rapidly and beyond the possible supply. Killarney and Maryland never showed better color and length and strength of stem, while Richmond is snapped up promptly on arrival and is as popular as in the holidays. Carnations have fluctuated between $1 and $3 per hundred, only a few selected novelties going above that quotation. Violets are again abundant and values are receding. A large quantity of unsalable stock came in last week, the cold wave being responsible. The top figure has been 50 cents per hundred. The street will now provide an outlet for the accumulation of the inferior grade. The slump in gardenias has been one of the surprises of the season. The short-stemmed stock is ridiculously low, some of it selling last week under $2 per hundred. The best sold slowly at $3 per dozen and from that to $10 per hundred. Orchids even have shared in the depression, and 25 to 50 cents for the best cattleyas is the prevailing figure. Valley and lilies show little life and prices remain low. Of freesia there is now no limit, and daffodils, bouvardia, daisies, sweet peas, mignonette, narcissi and hyacinths, with antirrhinum, tulips and wallflowers, complete a bulging supply of every seasonable flower.

from New York found Detroit a hospitable city and did not arrive here until late on Saturday. Everyone is enthusiastic over his reception and the success of the joint conventions. The only complaint made was against the weather and the consequent delays.

Joseph Manda, president of the New York Florists' Club, gave the usual dinner following election, to the other officers and heads of committees who serve during his administration, Saturday evening, January 6. About twenty were present and plans were perfected for a strenuous year.

The banquet season is on in earnest. The Tarrytown society celebrated its thirteenth anniversary January 17. January 18 was the date of the annual dinner of the North Westchester Horticultural and Agricultural Society at the New Castle Inn, Mt. Kisco. January 22 the Elberon Society will enjoy its annual banquet, and for Saturday evening, January 20, Charles Millang is managing what he calls a "Caldy-Waldy beefsteak dinner," at the Castle Cave, 271 Seventh avenue, that promises a record crowd and a unique exhibition.

The New York Florists' Club will celebrate its silver anniversary in February with the most elaborate banquet in its history.

Badgley, Riedel & Meyer called my attention to freesia of remarkable stem and flower, and a nice lot of baby primrose.

Woodrow & Marketos say business is quite above their expectations, but the enormous wrapping of plants for shipment in safety has "got on their nerves." It certainly has been a problem for ten days to move a plant a city block in safety.

P. J. Smith has received his average daily supply of lilies all through the zero temperature.

It is like a trip to a "land of sunshine" to drop into William Kessler's conservatory. With zero outside, blooming plants of all kinds are here, with some specially fine lilac and Firefly azaleas last week.

Henry M. Robinson & Co., of Boston, have felt the call of the metropolis and have opened a branch store at 46 West Twenty-sixth street.

The sympathy of the trade goes out to J. J. Coan in the loss of his mother.

A. L. Rickards is out of the city on his usual winter visit to the gardening fraternity and the firm reports large bookings of spring orders. This seems to be the report of all the seedsmen.

Ralph M. Ward & Co. are now installed in their new offices at 71 Murray street, where ample room and facilities are provided for their rapidly increasing business.

M. C. Ford says Henry Hession, the well-known Flatbush grower, is having exceptional success with carnations this season.

E. P. Bryan and A. W. Bryan, of Bound Brook, N. J., have purchased the Wadley interests in the nursery there, changing the name to the Bound Brook Nurseries and adding a tract of eighty acres to the original enterprise. Bryan Bros. will continue their retail store in Plainfield, N. J.

in the prospects for the coming year, with a lively building interest among the large growers.

The marriage of Herman Berkowitz, of the Young & Nugent forces, and Beatrice Wagner, Sunday evening, January 14, at Hennington hall, was a most interesting event and was attended by several hundred of the relatives and friends of the happy couple, including quite a number of florists, J. B. Nugent and Mrs. Nugent having the seats of honor. J. Austin Shaw.

Schedules in the assignment of the Smart Set Floral Co., 2297 Broadway, show liabilities of $3,934, with nominal assets of $1,507 and actual assets of $1,140.

Among the week's visitors have been J. A. Valentine, of Denver, and W. N. Rudd, of Morgan Park, Ill., in conference with C. H. Totty on National Flower Show matters.

A. Moltz & Co. made an assignment January 12, to Edward P. Sobel, their attorney. Mr. Sobel states that "the reason for the assignment is the illness of Abraham Moltz, one of the firm, and it is the hope that the business will be resumed at an early date." The deed of assignment was signed by Maurice L. Glass, a brother-in-law of Mr. Moltz, who became a partner July 1, 1910. Mr. Moltz had been in business about sixteen years.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

The near-zero weather of the last week has acted as a two-edged sword in the florists' trade of Washington. It has prevented an oversupply of stock and has kept prices up, but, on the other hand, it has checked trade to some extent; ice and snow interfere with deliveries, and the cold has caused considerable loss of stock in transit, and even in local stores and greenhouses. As a rule local dealers would prefer medium cold weather with moderate prices.

The social season is now in full swing here and there is much decorating going on. Good stock is demanded for these functions. Many orchids are being used. Roses are rather scarce and bringing good prices. Killarneys are among the best. These and valley and lilies are moving well. Carnations are more plentiful.

Various Notes.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Washington Florists' Exchange was held January 9. Some twenty were present. Regular routine business was transacted, including the reading of the officers' annual reports. W. Marche was elected president of the organization for the year 1912, succeeding G. Milton Thomas. The other officers were reëlected as follows: Vice-president, Theodore Diedrich; secretary, Adolph Bowdler; treasurer, John Robertson. Albert Schnell continues as manager. He has practically recovered from the attack of blood poisoning from which he suffered, following a rose thorn prick several weeks ago. His arm is now out of the sling and in usable condition. Mr. Schnell reports receiving a shipment of 2,000 carnations, the flowers being frozen into a solid mass of ice. A lot of callas also received by this firm was badly frozen.

Z. D. Blackistone's small downtown greenhouse, back of his store, was put out of commission by the cold the other night. The fire failed and a quantity of decorative plants was frozen. The loss did not interfere with Blackistone's job on the President's dinner to the diplomatic corps January 15, when 500 orchids were used.

It is understood that the business of the Pennock-Meehan Co., at its Washington branch, last year was nearly double that of 1910. C. H. H.

SEFTON FLORISTS' BOXES

CORRUGATED DESIGN STYLE AND FOLDING CUT FLOWER BOXES

Florists' success in shipping flowers depends to the greatest extent upon the point where their interest ceases in the sale of flowers. The progressive, prosperous florist retains his interest in a customer's order until it reaches destination, and for that reason he is careful to select the proper style and grade of box to insure safe delivery of his flowers.

Particular Florists are users of Sefton Corrugated Fibreboard Boxes for the shipment of Floral Designs as well as our superior line of Folding Cut Flower Boxes. They know from experience that Sefton Boxes combine high quality with low price and make neat, attractive packages which carry the flowers safely to destination. Write for our Flower Box Price List.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago; First VicePres., M. H. Duryea, New York City; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.

THE government has begun the 1912 free seeds distribution.

THE Thorburn catalogue for 1912 is the one hundred tenth annual edition.

WM. M. REID, formerly with Currie Bros. Co., Milwaukee, is on the road for W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago.

VISITED CHICAGO: Ralph M. Ward, of Ralph M. Ward & Co., and C. W. Scott, of Yokohama Nursery Co., New York.

G. TEGELAAR, traveler for C. J. Speelman & Sons, Sassenheim, Holland, is to wed Miss Carrie Pearce, daughter of Sam Pearce, his largest customer at Chicago.

PETTY BROS. SEED CO., Liberty, Mo., which formerly specialized on corn, has this season extended its operations to include a full line of field, vegetable and flower seeds.

THE country is full of Dutch bulb salesmen. They are going over the list of buyers with a fine-toothed comb and assert the orders booked are fully up to the best previous records.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & Co., Philadelphia, have issued a new edition of "Sweet Peas Up-to-date," by Geo. W. Kerr, with which is included a 20-page supplement containing a list of varieties introduced since the last edition, in 1910, and cultural details and selection of varieties for winter flowering under glass.

PEAS IN MONTANA.

A local paper at Bozeman, Mont., had this to say in its issue of January 9:

"The fourth of the eastern seed firms to enter the Gallatin valley for the purpose of cultivating garden peas for the seed, was introduced this morning through its representative, B. E. Brotherton, president of the Peninsular Seed Co., of Port Huron, Mich. Mr. Brotherton is a brother of the Mr. Brotherton of the Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., of Cambridge, N. Y., which will cultivate seed peas in the valley this summer, and whose representative, L. L. Brotherton, is a nephew of the representative of the Port Huron firm, who arrived last night in Bozeman.

"The Jerome B. Rice Co., Cambridge, N. Y.; N. B. Keeney & Son, of Leroy, N. Y.; the Clark Seed Co., of Milford, Conn., and finally the Peninsular Seed Co., of Port Huron, Mich., will all cultivate the peas in the valley this summer. As this year marks practically the start of this industry in the Gallatin valley, the propitious beginning seems to promise big things for the future.

"Mr. Brotherton stated that his company expects to place about 100 bushels of seed this year, intending to make a much larger seeding in the following year if the returns this year are good. This will require a tract of 300 or 400 acres. The representatives of some of the companies now in the field state that if returns are satisfactory they expect their companies intend to purchase at least a part of the land in the Gallatin in which their products are sown.

"Inquiries have been received recently by local parties that indicate at least a probability of another industry for Bozeman, that of green pea canning. Several eastern firms have written for information, and there is a possibility that two or three canneries will make a start sometime within

THE CANNERS' OUTPUT.

What are said to be the official figures of the 1911 pack of vegetables, as made up by confidential reports to the National Canned Goods Association committee on statistics, is now in the hands of brokers and is public property, although the statistics, according to the general understanding, were to be made available only to the members of the association. The committee, it is understood, took all precautions to confine the publication of its findings to its own members, but it would seem that there has been a leak somewhere. It can be said on reliable authority that the statistical committee of the National Canned Goods Association from the reports submitted to them by packers found the 1911 output of tomatoes to be 8,499,000 cases, or about 468,000 cases more than last year, but some twenty-six per cent less than in 1908 and 1909. The corn pack of the country in 1911, according to the reported association figures, was the largest in the history of the trade, aggregating 14,301,000 cases. The pea pack of 1911 was about up to the average of the two preceding years, but the outlook is for a smaller pack this coming year, owing to the scarcity of seed. The 1911 output, according to what is given as the official figures put out by the national association, was 4,372,000 cases, or about twenty-five per cent less than the average for the two years preceding 1910.—Journal of Commerce.

KOERNER'S NOVELTIES.

H. W. Koerner, of Milwaukee, has raised a number of new things in gladioli and dahlias.

His Gladiolus Early Bird is said to be one of the first in the market, two weeks ahead of America; it ripens early and is ready for forcing December 1. It is said to be one of the best shippers, with a thin, straight stem with ten to twelve flowers open at one time, a pleasing shade of fiery pink and Mr. Koerner says it is an extra good multiplier.

Dahlia Crimson Beauty is described as an extra good crimson cut flower variety. It is of decorative type, with long, thin, wiry stem, carrying its large flowers high above the foliage. Dahlia Golden Nugget is described as resembling a chrysanthemum; it has long, loose, wavy petals. It carries its flowers on long, thin, wiry stems, high above the foliage. The color is yellowish orange. Dahlia Snow Storm is pure white, the long-stemmed single blooms being unusually large. Dahlia Cream City is a single flowering variety of the Century type. It has a long, thin, wiry stem, carrying the flowers high above the foliage. The color is orange buff.

Sentiment in business has cost most men much money. It doesn't pay. There is about as much judgment in buying bulbs from every man who calls just because he is a nice fellow, as though you bought coal from every coal dealer for the same reason. It may be nice and pleasing to the mind, but does it pay? If you are satisfied to do it that way it's, of course, no one's business to interfere; but, assuming that you are in business to make money, and not alone to make friends, it does not pay to buy from every man who comes along. It complicates instead of simplifies deliveries; necessitates various unnecessary transactions; keeps a man on the lookout in so many directions it is a burden to him, and besides all this he pays dearly for it. Get in connection with a real good, first-class American house; let them know your manner of doing business, just what you want, when you want it, and when you want to pay for it, and you will find it easier sailing and more satisfactory all around.

You can send us a complete list of what you buy for quotations, and it may surprise you to know just what we can do on "whole orders." Send for a catalogue, at any rate.

VALLEY FOR EASTER.

At what time should lily of the valley be brought from the cellar and placed under glass, to have them in bloom for Easter? S. G. B.

If forced in a glass-covered frame, with good bottom-heat, three to four weeks will suffice. If to be grown in flats, pots or pans on the benches, allow them six weeks in an average night temperature of 55 degrees. If open a little early, the valley can easily be held back in a cool, shaded house. C. W.

Vegetable Forcing.

WHITE FLY ON LETTUCE.

I am growing lettuce and it is infested with white flies. They eat the lettuce in spots. What can I use to exterminate the flies without making the lettuce unfit for use? C. H. H.

Hydrocyanic acid gas is the only remedy for white fly. It will kill the pests without injury to lettuce, unless made entirely too strong.

For a 100-foot house, about twenty feet wide, three jars of diluted sulphuric acid are sufficient for the fumigating. Use half-gallon stone jars and put in each jar about a half pint of acid and the same quantity of water, about an hour before wanted. Into each of these jars of diluted acid drop a package (paper and all) containing two ounces of cyanide of potash, ninety-eight per cent granular. It is better to have it wrapped in double papers by the druggist from whom you procure it, as it is deadly poison; so, also, is the gas that arises as soon as the acid eats through the paper. In dropping the packages, start at the farther end of the house and work toward the entrance; then get out promptly and stay out until morning.

It will take a second dose, after the eggs hatch, to exterminate the white fly entirely. It is safe to go into the house in the morning and open the ventilators, although the gas can still be noticed. Wash the jars out with the hose after burying the refuse in the morning.

Some kinds of plants will not stand this kind of fumigating, but most of them will. The foliage must be perfectly dry when using the gas, as it settles in moisture and will burn the leaves if they are wet. H. G.

TOO COOL FOR CUCUMBERS.

I should like to get a little light on a subject with which I am not familiar. I have a bench of sweet peas, 4x200 feet, with a row on each side. I have lettuce planted in the center. I should like to plant this bed, as it is a solid bed, to cucumbers in the spring. Sweet peas generally give out in hot weather. The temperature is carnation temperature—about 50 degrees at night. Would this be all right? About how soon could I plant the cucumbers, and what varieties do best inside? Should they be started in the beds or in pots? There are four inches of soil, with cinders for drainage. C. A. M.

Special Strain of Golden Self-Blanching CELERY

We offer an exceptionally fine strain known as our Perfection Strain. This seed is crop 1910; has been thoroughly tried out and we know it is right. It is almost free from green sorts, and more than one customer has told us they did not find a hollow stalk in the field this year. The germination is perfect. We consider it Perfection in every respect and do not think it can be improved on.

to 70 degrees at night, and as high as 85 degrees in the daytime. If you can not keep the house above 65 degrees, do not try to grow cukes. You will also find that few, if any, of the other plants you grow can be kept in the same house.

Buy only forcing varieties when you buy your seed. All seedsmen have good forcing strains. You could grow only one row of cucumbers in the bed. Put one plant in a place, two feet apart in the row.

Do not try to grow cukes until late in the spring, when you can keep the house warm enough, and it will pay you better, as they are a hard crop to grow profitably in winter. Start the plants in 4-inch pots. Plant the seed one month or five weeks before you want to bench the plants. H. G.

SLOW GROWTH OF CUCUMBERS.

We have a house of cucumbers and, as this is our first attempt at growing this crop, we should like a little advice. The plants are now about four inches high and appear to be in pretty good condition, but do not seem to be growing well. We were late in getting our heater in and the temperature dropped to 32 degrees several times a week or ten days after the seed was planted. There are some small, black-winged insects in the house; I presume they are aphis and they seem to be increasing. We sprayed the plants with Bordeaux mixture and also with a nicotine extract. Can we fight these insects by fumigating? Would fumigating have any bad effect on the cucumbers? We have a colony of bees in the house. Would it injure them? Will vaporizing sulphur or nicotine extracts injure the bees?

There are yellow marks or blotches on some of the leaves, and in the center of some of them is a small hole, like a pin hole, clear through. What causes this? G. & F.

Cucumbers require a warm temperature and that probably explains why yours are not growing well. A temperature of 68 to 70 degrees at night and 85 degrees in the daytime suits them best. Even experienced cucumber growers have considerable difficulty at this time of year and few care to try them for some weeks yet, as there are many critical points besides the temperature.

Light fumigating will not hurt the bees, unless strong enough to hurt the vines, but you do not need the bees inside for several weeks yet. Nicotine, used either for fumigating or for putting on the pipes, is excellent for aphis and thrips and will not hurt the cucumbers. Sulphur will keep down the mildew, but must be used sparingly. The yellow spots on the leaves are probably a fungous disease, but the Bordeaux mixture should have killed it off by this time.

If cucumbers do not do right from the start, it is sometimes useless to spend time and money coaxing them along, as they are not likely to pay well. If you find your crop stunted or injured seriously at any time, it may be well to throw the plants out and put in something else quickly. A failure with one crop need not mean that the season is lost, as the house can be replanted, or planted to radishes, which will be marketed in five weeks from the seed; then the house can be used for geraniums and bedding plants for spring. H. G.

PROPAGATING VINCAS.

Would it be practical to propagate vincas at this time of year from cuttings, and if so, which is the best method? J. W. I.

Vincas root readily at this season. Heel cuttings are best, preferably the short growths, a few inches long. More ripened growths, cut in pieces, will also root, but require more time. A bottom heat of 60 to 65 degrees, shade and plenty of water are needed. C. W.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The frosty nights have been replaced by light rains and milder weather generally. Stock of all kinds, which has been rather scarce since the holidays, has gradually become more plentiful. Carnations are still being held slightly higher than they were one year ago, and roses, except short-stemmed stock, also are a scarce article. A few extra Beauties are shown every day and they are costing the stores from $2.50 to $3 per dozen. Good Brides and Kaiserins have ready sale for funeral orders, and much of the lighter pink stock is used the same way. Daffodils are becoming more plentiful, and the same can be said of narcissi. Romans do not move fast and valley is in oversupply. Violets are over their temporary setback and are now quite numerous again. With the disappearance of our frosty nights of a week ago and the substitution of rain instead, they are of better color and length of stem. Orchids, especially cattleyas, are plentiful. Business is only fair, but quite a bit of funeral work is distributed among the different stores.

Various Notes.

Charles T. Mason is on a trip through Oregon and Washington.

The Hackel Floral Co. has given up the store across from the present location on Powell street.

H. Hayashi has sold out his entire Alameda business and will devote his attention to his Elmhurst nursery.

L. G. Lewis; formerly of Los Angeles, is in town on a short visit. G.

VICTORIA, B. C.

The Market.

The business for the Christmas season was easily ahead of anything that ever before reached this locality. The demand was limited only by the supply. Everything was sold out at good prices and the returns were largely cash. Plants were practically cleaned out before the cut flower trade began, so that the delivery problem was simplified. The weather was ideal, with an average temperature of about 45 degrees and no wind. Chrysanthemums were a leading feature and their condition was perfect. It seems quite possible to have perfect mums here until February 1.

The New Year's trade was fine. Of course, no plants were left, but cut flowers were sold out clean again and the receipts again were cash. No doubt these conditions are somewhat due to the boom the Canadian west is now experiencing, and can hardly be expected to continue always at the same high level.

The third festival in which the florists largely participate and which is peculiar to the west, is the Chinese New Year, coming somewhere within two weeks each way from February 1. It is held this year for the last time. The Chinese revolution seems to have modernized the Chinese in a day. On the coast, pigtails have totally disappeared and with them the terrible power of the many fearsome devils, and the Chinese New Year of 1913 will be held January 1. F. B.

PASADENA, CAL.

At the annual meeting of the Pasadena Gardeners' Association, it was decided to change the name to the Pasadena Horticultural Society.

The following officers were elected: J. B. Feldman, president; John Blake, vice-president; George H. Kennedy, recording secretary; L. R. Brand, financial secretary; William Hutchinson, treasurer. Robert Pegg was elected a trustee for a three-year term; Julius Thedin for two years, and William Farrell for one year. Charles S. Forsythe was elected sergeant-at-arms.

Reports showed that the past year had been a very successful one for the association. The two flower shows conducted by it were successes, and all the other activities of the organization brought about satisfactory results. The outlook is for a good year in 1912. It is planned to hold a flower show in the spring and another in the fall.

TACOMA, WASH.

The Market.

Last week was one of the worst for many years, for we received everything on the list in the weather line, from summer temperatures to ten inches of snow, which certainly made it a trying time for those engaged in the flower business. Business has, as usual, been a little dull since the holidays, but it seems to be gaining again now. Flowers are still scarce and everyone has an unusual amount of split carnations, caused perhaps by the changeable weather of the last few weeks.

The Visit to Seattle.

Tuesday, January 9, several of the local growers got together for a visit to our neighboring city, Seattle. The day was spent in visiting various greenhouses and at five in the afternoon they met the Seattle club at the Imperial alleys and the next two hours were spent in bowling. The three games played were noted mostly for their poor scores, Mr. Buxton, of the Seattle team, being high man, with an average of 197.

After the game came the dinner; then all attended the regular meeting of the Seattle Florists' Club, where a "get-together" meeting was held. Many important matters were discussed, and everyone came away from this meeting well pleased with his treatment. When it comes to the real Seattle spirit we will surely have to hand it to the bowling team and its captain, Mr. Holze. We expect the team in this city January 18 for the first of a series of games to be played between the two clubs. J. L. S.

SEATTLE, WASH.

The Market.

Trade following the holidays has been good, and the demand for all kinds of cut flowers has kept pretty well up to the supply. Roses and carnations are scarce. Violets are selling well and bulb stock, which is now coming in more plentifully, is selling freely. Some heavy funeral orders last week have helped trade considerably.

Club Meeting.

The Seattle Florists' Club met in the Chamber of Commerce for the regular monthly session Tuesday evening, January 9. There was a large attendance and four new members were taken into the fold. The schedule for the rose show was revised and ordered to be distributed, the date of the show being left open, to be fixed later in accord with the season. The committee on guarantee fund reported a favorable reception. After the usual business was disposed of, the Tacoma Florists' Club invaded the meeting and a pleasant hour was spent in discussing matters of general interest to the trade.

Various Notes.

The H. Harrington Co., owing to the large increase in the retail trade, has taken over the whole of the store at 916 Second avenue, and will now have one of the largest and most commodious establishments on the coast, in a first-class situation for business.

J. J. Karins, representing Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, was a recent visitor.

Jean Lamley, manager for Mrs. L. W. McCoy, has been called east, owing to the illness of his mother.

Sam Graff this week opened a new flower store on the viaduct, on Marion street. He has a good location and lots of room to carry a large stock. He intends handling a full supply of seeds and nursery stock in addition to the flower business.

The Tacoma florists visited the city en masse January 9, and, after interviewing brother florists at their premises, a friendly bowling match was played at the Imperial alleys, the result of which is recorded in the bowling column on another page of this issue.

In the evening they were entertained by their hosts with a dinner in Grant's cafe, afterwards adjourning to the club meeting. Such visits as these tend to cement the bonds of amity between the trade in both cities. T. W.

the men under him. Mr. Kleger fittingly acknowledged the gift.

Mr. Kleger has purchased twenty acres or more at Clatskanie, Ore., and will start in the greenhouse business for himself.

Business is about the same as previously reported. A laxity must be expected after the holidays. The snow and general bad weather for the ten days after New Year's hurt business, in a measure. Funeral work is brisk, which cleans the surplus, yet there is plenty of stock. Carnations are in unusually heavy crop. Roses are also plentiful, especially White Killarneys. In spring flowers, Romans, Paper Whites, freesias and daffodils are available in pans as well as cut flowers.

E. R. C.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The Market.

Stock has been cleaning up well in almost all lines, but, unfortunately, this is perhaps due more to a shortage of flowers than to heavy demand. Trade is running along about on an even keel and there is little to find fault with and little to praise. The dry weather is responsible for the shortage in outdoor flowers, and the Japanese growers say "Violets no good." But they say it with that engaging smile of theirs, and one is tempted to quote the old saying that "a sweet smile goes a long way"—laterally or literally, whichever way the printer likes. Roses are improving in quality and quantity right along. Killarney is decidedly the best of the popular roses, with Richmond a good second. Radiance is beautiful in color, but the flowers have not the substance they had earlier. Other varieties are becoming more plentiful. In yellow, Harry Kirk seems to lead, and the flowers of Mrs. Aaron Ward are usually short and vary so much in color that retailers complain they are difficult to use. American Beauties are of fair quality only. Wholesalers and retailers complain of the keeping qualities of the white and pink carnations. The flowers appear to be shipped too soon after cutting and should be better cooled off. There is little complaint against the reds. Good Cecil Brunner roses are scarce. Sweet peas are improving right along and growers say these will be in full supply now. Outdoor roses are scarce, but there are some good blooms among them. Flowers for filling in funeral pieces are not too plentiful. The new marguerite, Mrs. F. Sander, is fine for the purpose and thrives well outdoors here. A good, businesslike rain is falling as I write, and it is badly needed.

Various Notes.

Things are looking fine at Ed Rust's nursery at South Pasadena, and a look through showed the propagating in a forward condition and all stock in perfect health. The new conservatory is now furnished with graceful vines and foliage plants and is a welcome addition. The nursery stock in the lower place is growing magnificently under the Skinner watering system, and in the way of receipts last December was the best month in the whole of Mr. Rust's twenty-nine years in business.

At the fine store of The Roserie, on Broadway, beautiful window displays have been the rule, and an elegant class of stock is handled. Business has been exceptionally good, according to C. J. Muller, but I was sorry to hear of Mrs. Muller's continued ill health, which necessitates her remaining out on the desert.

G. M. Creutz Co. says business is keeping up fairly well, though stock is short, cleaning up well daily. Violets and greens are specialties here, and progress is apparent along all lines.

Tassano Bros. have opened a new store at 356 South Hill street. The store is deep and at the rear is a large room and basement, which will give plenty of room for handling the fine grade of greens for which this firm is noted. Tony says trade has been a little dull since the holidays.

S. R. Lundy, representing the A. L. Randall Co., Chicago, has been drumming up business for his firm and, incidentally, enjoying a little California sunshine after his experience of 20 degrees below zero farther north.

Batiste, recently with the Redondo Floral Co., is now at Jack's Flower Shop.

Morris Goldenson left recently with a party of friends for the Santa Cruz islands for an extended hunting trip. Two cooks, two tents and about a carload of eatables were included in the outfit, and probably none of the party will perish of thirst. Meanwhile business flourishes at the store and J. Gordon and Walter Garbett have their hands full.

Charles Morton, of the Los Angeles Flower Market, has been on a business trip to San Francisco.

Several large decorations have been carried out by the Hayward Floral Co. In one an 8-foot centerpiece of Harry Kirk roses was used, and in another every room in the house was decorated with flowers of a different color. J. Reeve Darling, the proprietor, was recently the victim of a check fraud, but, I am glad to say, recovered his money.

Stewart Bros. report business in deciduous and citrus fruit trees good, their orange trees having been only slightly hurt by the recent frost.

Excellent business is reported by the Ingleside Floral Co. Considerable sympathy is felt for A. W. Ross, the principal owner of this business, in the ill health of Mrs. Ross, which will probably necessitate her leaving the city for the purer air of the ranch.

"Great business," says Frank Lichtenberg, of Thee Florists. "Too busy to talk."

Away out on North Main street or thereby, 652 South Griffin avenue, to be exact, the Standard Pottery Co. has its offices and works, and here we found Messrs. Anderson and Brown as busy as the proverbial bee. Florists and nurserymen who are seeking something artistic and good in the way of ornamental pottery regularly run out to see the stock of this class of goods—see it in the making and see the finished product. Big Indian bowls, baskets, vases, window boxes and everything for the florists' or cemetery use is here in the greatest variety, not forgetting the hundreds of thousands of the common though useful flower pots. Both clay and workmanship are good, and the result is a clean, well-baked pot, light, strong and red, which is being dispatched all over the coast in carload and smaller lots.

The store at 337 South Spring street has had a varied career since Mrs. Dolphin opened it, and it is out of the running now. Musical instruments and talking machines adorn the window.

George Leaver, of the Los Angeles Nursery, is going in more largely for bulb-growing and cutting out some of the nursery stock. Mr. Leaver is an old Review reader, having taken the paper since its first issue.

In the windows of Freeman Lewis, on Fourth street, the magnificent silver cups won by the National cars at Santa Monica and other race meetings have been on display, six splendid trophies, one said to be valued at $5,000. Extra help has been used here to keep up with the rush of decorations.

Fred Rafferty, of Santa Ana, is sending in fine Roman hyacinths.

Henry Turner, of Dieterich & Turner, Montebello, intends to make his new rose houses wider; 60x300 feet each will be the size of the houses in the new range to be built this summer. "The truth is often spoken in jest," and the christening of this place as "Heisse Luft" was certainly prophetic. While all around, frost cut tomatoes and other tender plants, not a leaf was injured here, even on such tender stock as Bougainvillea lateritia and philodendrons.

Howard & Smith are working on several important landscape contracts and report inquiries for spring business good. The budded roses are perfect this year, forty acres of them at the rose grounds at Gage, and the output will this year be close to a million. At Montebello everything is in fine trim, while the specimen grounds in the city are well worth a visit, owing to the great variety and good quality of the stock shown.

At the Cahuenga Valley Nursery, Miss Minnie L. Brydges manages the entire business and has since her father's death. Miss Brydges is justly proud of her fine stock of budded rose plants. She has made a study of the best stocks for certain varieties and has been most successful.

AZALEAS AFTER FLOWERING.

What is the best method of caring for azaleas after blooming, and how many seasons will they do good service? V. A. A.

Keep the plants in a cool greenhouse until danger from frost has passed. Pick off all the seed pods and keep well syringed. The plants can be carried over summer either in pots plunged in ashes or some other material, or planted outdoors. They enjoy a soil containing some leaf-mold and sand, but this is not necessary. The main essentials to successful culture are taking care that they do not become dry at the root and hosing them overhead every evening in summer. For this reason they should be planted where they can be reached with water. A mulch of spent manure is useful in retaining moisture about the roots. Dig up and pot the plants early in October. Treated in this way, azaleas can be carried over, if required, for many years. C. W.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Officers for 1911-12: Pres., J. H. Dayton, Painesville, O.; Vice-pres., W. H. Wyman, North Abington, Mass.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-seventh annual meeting, Boston June 1912.

THE nurseryman who has made quality his hobby is just about coming into his own.

S. SIABRE, the nurseryman of Webster, Tex., has established a branch nursery at Whistler, Ala.

IT is reported that Isaiah Martin, a nurseryman at Redlands, Cal., has made a great success by specializing on olive trees, which have come into great demand.

FIRE, January 10, did $10,000 damage at the nursery of John Cannedy, at Carrollton, Ill. The storage house and contents were destroyed. Insurance, $2,500.

THE recent conference of nursery interests with the government officials back of the Simmons bill is reported to have resulted in an agreement that the bill shall be amended to place the administration of the quarantine law in the hands of a commission of five rather than in the hands of one government officer.

THE BOSTON CONVENTION.

The thirty-seventh annual meeting of the American Association of Nurserymen will take place at Boston June 12 to 14. The committee on arrangements has selected the Hotel Brunswick as headquarters. The program will be arranged by Charles J. Maloy, Rochester, N. Y., which ensures something good; and A. E. Robinson, Bedford, Mass., is chairman of the committee on exhibits. The chairman of the committee on entertainment is J. Woodward Manning, of North Wilmington, Mass.

FEDERAL LAW TAKING SHAPE.

William Pitkin, chairman of the legislative committee of the American Association of Nurserymen, makes the following report regarding the conference held at Washington, December 28 and 29:

"I am glad to be able to say that the prospects look favorable for a satisfactory settlement of the dispute relative to the proposed federal bills regulating the importation of nursery stock. The National Association of Horticultural Inspectors and the Association of Entomologists held their annual convention in Washington. Your chairman, with Irving Rouse, W. P. Stark and W. H. Wyman, had a number of conferences with the legislative committee of the Inspectors' Associa tion, and also with individual members and with Dr. Howard and Mr. Marlatt, of the Department of Agriculture, and a tentative agreement was reached subject to the approval of our legislative committee, which I think will be secured.

"The proposed bill will provide for permits, notifications, and both domestic and foreign quarantine, but the provisions for foreign and domestic quarantine will be limited to insects and diseases new to the United States and not now established in this country. The bill will also provide for an administrative board and for public hearings before the issuance of any quarantine or stringent order, and with an opportunity for appeal from the decision of that board to the Secretary of Agriculture. A bill is to be drafted by the Department of Agriculture and submitted to our legislative committee before any further action is taken.

"The committee felt, in view of the sentiment that had been aroused by the Department of Agriculture and the entomologists in favor of some form of federal regulation, that it was wise to join with the entomologists and inspectors and agree on a compromise measure that would be a protection to the public and the fruit growers and would not be extremely burdensome on the nursery interests; and it is our belief that this has been accomplished by the proposed bill.

"The committee was ably assisted by Prof. S. J. Hunter of the Kansas University, who came to Washington with Mr. Stark, representing the Western Wholesale Association, and we feel that we are much indebted to him for his wise counsel and advice and for his efforts in reconciling the differences existing between the committee and his associates among the horticultural inspectors. The committee also feels greatly indebted to the legislative committee of the Inspectors' Association for their courtesy and evident desire to do all that they could to meet the nurserymen on a mutually satisfactory ground. That committee consisted of "The proposition has the endorsement of the Association of Horticultural Inspectors and of Mr. Marlatt, representing the Department of Agriculture, and if the bill as drawn correctly carries out the understanding now existing, and I have no doubt that it will, it is felt that there will be no serious difficulty in securing favorable action during the present session of Congress."

PRIVET IN NORTH DAKOTA.

Would you please tell me whether privet is hardy as a hedge plant here, in North Dakota, and which privet would be the best in this climate?

R. O.

Ligustrum ovalifolium, California privet, is the variety mostly grown and is about the only one advertised for hedging purposes. It is, however, not to be recommended for any state where the temperature frequently falls below zero. The hardiest privets are L. Ibota, or Japanese privet, and L. Amurense, or Amoor river privet. The last named has successfully withstood a temperature of 20 degrees below zero, and if any variety will succeed with you it should be this one. C. W.

AMHERST, MASS.

The short course now in session at the Massachusetts Agricultural College promises to be one of the most successful ever held. The following men are taking the floricultural course:

Frank J. Cartier, Mittineague, Mass.
Harvey W. Cotton, Brighton, Mass.
Fred Dale, Manchester, Mass.
Sylvester Copan, Tarrytown, N. Y.
Manning Imlay, Zanesville, O.
George Manton, Eglinton, Ont.
Frank J. McGregor, Newburyport, Mass.
George W. Wall, Phoenixville, Pa.
Caleb H. Wheeler, Concord, Mass.
Chatterton Warburton, Jr., Fall River, Mass.
Stewart Worthen, Mittineague, Mass.
Michael Macken, Glendale, Mass.

Some of these men have had considerable experience in greenhouse work and in retail work, and are taking up the work especially for the technical and scientific advantages of the course.

Thus far the lectures have dealt largely with construction problems. Aside from the lectures given on this subject by Professor White, W. R. Cobb, of Lord & Burnham Co., gave a valuable illustrated lecture on Friday afternoon, January 5. R. O. King lectured on Friday afternoon, January 12, on the King construction.

In Mr. Cobb's lecture he first described the character of the older houses and showed the advancement which had been made in modern greenhouse construction. He next described in detail the commercial house known as the "flat rafter type on iron posts, with curtain walls." He spoke of the "semi-iron pipe-frame house on posts," with a wall of the same construction, and described the various conservatory types on iron sills, with solid concrete walls. He then discussed the advantages and disadvantages of different types of construction.

The observation trip on Saturday, January 6, was to H. W. Field's commercial range in Northampton, where everything was found in the usual neat, up-to-date condition in which the manager, Mr. Graves, always keeps things.

AMERICAN PILLAR

HAS HOSTS OF FRIENDS

Tenants Harbor, Me., 2-3-11.—Gentlemen: Many thanks for your beautiful catalog. I want to tell you that I have one American Pillar which I have had for four years. It grows beautifully in this climate (way down on the coast of Maine) and is very much admired by everyone who sees it. Very truly yours.—Mrs. J. H. D————.

New Castle, Del., 11-12-1910.—Gentlemen: The American Pillar Rose you sent me is the finest of them all, and I have some ten different varieties. It was covered with thousands of blossoms, and the original plant covers an arch over ten feet high, and ten or twelve feet long. I have many Roses, but the American Pillar is the most admired of them all. I never find any trouble with mildew or insects. Your Roses are better than you claim and I am a most enthusiastic believer in Conard & Jones Company. Very sincerely.—Mrs. Selden S. Deemer.

Comment from the London Garden.—"A most notable feature in this glorious display (Temple Flower Show in London) was the New 'American Pillar' Rose. The large and attractive rich rose pink blooms are produced in immense clusters, the white centers of the blooms adding to their attractiveness.—Florists' Exchange."

The best pink rambler is American Pillar; it is an extraordinary grower, its foliage is darker in color than any other, and it is more evergreen than any known kind. It produces immense clusters of large flowers from 1½ to 2½ inches in diameter. This variety created quite a sensation when shown by us last year; it has been awarded the R. H. S. Award of Merit.—Hobbies, Limited, London, England.

"The Rose is of too recent introduction to write otherwise than generally about it. Its strong points appear to be its fine growth, lateness and showy flowers, and its really magnificent foliage, which clothes the stem down to the base, the pillars looking in Autumn as though clothed with ivy rather than a Rose foliage. Its special uses are as a tall pillar or rambling over a pergola, arch or screen."—From 1911 Rose Annual of the National Rose Society.

TORONTO.

The Market.

The public is spending its money on coal instead of on cut flowers. For the last two weeks the thermometer in this city has ranged anywhere from 5 to 20 degrees below zero. Business has been affected to a large extent and all dealers report trade dull. Some little difficulty is being experienced in making deliveries, and stock coming in from outside points is often frozen on arrival. On the whole, however, stock is good.

Various Notes.

A. E. Moore, Toronto's wholesale florist, is sending out a handsome and useful souvenir in the shape of a thermometer and barometer combined.

R. B. Evans, chief draughtsman for the parks department, is an applicant for the position of park commissioner, in place of the late James Wilson.

Thomas A. Ivey & Son, of Port Dover, Ont., are distributing a neat 1912 calendar.

The Connon Floral Co., Hamilton, Ont., has issued a fine calendar.

E. A. F.

CLEVELAND.

Gordon Gray, one of Cleveland's veteran florists, is seriously ill with erysipelas.

The Wilhelmy Bros. Co. has been incorporated, chartered to do a general florists' business. The capital stock is $5,000, divided into fifty shares of $100 each. The incorporators are Walter McMahon, Edward A. Wilhelmy, Fred Desberg, M. J. Roan and E. P. Strong.

DANVILLE, ILL.

At 5 a. m. January 7 fire started in the boiler-room of the Danville Floral Co., burning it to the ground and destroying the ends of the greenhouses. The heating apparatus was completely destroyed and, as it was 16 degrees below zero at the time, the whole place froze up. For the present a retail trade with shipped-in stock is all that can be done, but H. A. Dubuis, the proprietor, hopes to get started again in the spring.

Trade Conditions.

The exceedingly cold weather of the last week has proved effective in almost entirely destroying any demand for flowers and in increasing the labors of the growers. During the week the temperature went the lowest in five years, as low as 28 below zero being reported at Woonsocket. Funeral work has kept things moving to a certain degree, and a few weddings and social functions have added their influence, but the week has been far from busy. Much difficulty was also experienced in making deliveries.

Various Notes.

Joseph Kopelman visited Boston twice last week.

A. Holscher is bringing in some fine tulips.

Johnston Bros. had the decorations for the annual charity ball at the Narragansett hotel.

F. Macrae & Sons lost a large number of lights of glass in the recent storm.

James Robertson, gardener for Mrs. T. O. Richardson, of Newport, has been invited to read a paper on dahlias, March 8, before the newly organized Horticultural Society at Greystone.

E. D. Tucker, formerly conducting the Mineral Spring Avenue Greenhouses, has opened a store on Broad street, Pawtucket.

J. A. Budlong & Son Co., at Auburn, cut all the ice they use at their large plant and last week began the harvesting at Blackamore pond, housing about thirty tons an hour. W. H. M.

THE NEW YELLOW FORCING ROSE SUNBURST

This magnificent, giant yellow rose has been tested for three years in our benches; it stands head and shoulders above all other sorts of its color and will rank with American Beauty and the Killarneys in value and grandeur—because

It has a long, pointed bud, which can be cut tight for market. It is pre-eminently a long-stemmed rose. The stem is always stiff. It is free in bottom breaks. Is extraordinarily vigorous and healthy. Belongs in the class of Big Roses. Its keeping qualities rank with the best. Buds shipped from Richmond last December opened up perfectly in both Philadelphia and New York, where it scored 90 before the Florists' Club.

The color is orange-copper or golden orange and golden yellow, all intense shades, extremely brilliant in effect.

Come and see it growing; we have 8,000 of it benched.

Does splendidly out of doors; will rank high as a bedder. At the Chicago show, 1910, it was awarded the silver cup for the best new rose never before exhibited, and the judges unanimously gave it honorable mention additional. Has created a sensation wherever shown.

Raised by M. Pernet-Ducher, from whom we bought the American rights.

We have divided our stock with Mr. C. H. Totty, of Madison, N. J., to give eastern growers a chance to see it growing. Will be distributed March 1 in America by C. H. Totty and The E. G. Hill Co. Mr. Pernet will distribute same date in Europe.

The American price is $30.00 per 100; $250.00 per 1000 (own roots); $5.00 per 100 additional for grafts

The Market.

The opening day of this week was much better than any day last week. It was, however, probably only a general replenishing on the part of the retailers that caused this demand. The extremely cold weather seems to have given the flower-buying public cold feet or some other such dread malady, for they surely are not turning out en masse to get blooms.

The dullness apparent in the shipping business in cut flowers immediately after the first of the year is disappearing and boxes are now again leaving on outbound trains with a most gratifying regularity. The demand from other towns for green goods, including cut ferns, plumosus and Sprengeri, has continued strong.

Every kind of seasonable flower can easily be had now in the market, and most of them at any hour before close each day. Even Killarney, which has been on the short side for some time, is easily available. The same is true of American Beauties, Richmond and white roses. The offerings of all varieties of carnations are sufficient for calls. Narcissi are selling slowly. Good single violets, lilies, callas and choice valley are the blooms that clean up quickly. In New York doubles practically only specials are being offered. Orchid offerings include some choice stock.

A few of the consignors to this market do not seem to realize that the thermometer has dropped below zero, and as a result some boxes have arrived in badly frosted condition.

Opinions have been expressed by many that as soon as the weather moderates business will again go on its busy way. If their forecasts are correct the market will undoubtedly be ready with a quantity of good stock. There has been much bright sunshine.

Various Notes.

C. E. Critchell has been getting some fine orchids from Fennel, the Cynthiana, Ky., grower.

Alex Ostendarp, of the Cincinnati Cut Flower Exchange, reports a heavy call for plumosus and Sprengeri.

The excellent Romans from Albert McCullough's own conservatories are finding a ready sale.

Martin Reukauf, representing Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, was in town on his fortnightly visit last week.

The regular monthly meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held at Pembroke hall January 10, President J. F. Johnson in the chair. A communication was read from the Moore Seed Co. offering a prize for cinerarias at our spring show. Edward S. Smith was elected to active membership.

The judges for the monthly competition were Messrs. Everett, Gray and Vert. They gave Alex. McKenzie first for twenty-five mixed carnations, for twenty-five sprays of sweet peas and for six spikes of snapdragon. Robert Marshall was first for cyclamen. H. Gaut received the thanks of the society for a display of rhubarb and G. Robinson a cultural certificate for freesia. The members were greatly interested in the freesia, the variety being new to many and the flowers exceedingly well grown.

The committee appointed to make arrangements for the annual dinner reported that it will be held at the Oriental hotel, Glen Cove, January 25. Messrs. Cliff and Everett were appointed to represent the society at the dinner of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society January 18.

The exhibits for February will be gardenias, mushrooms and freesias.

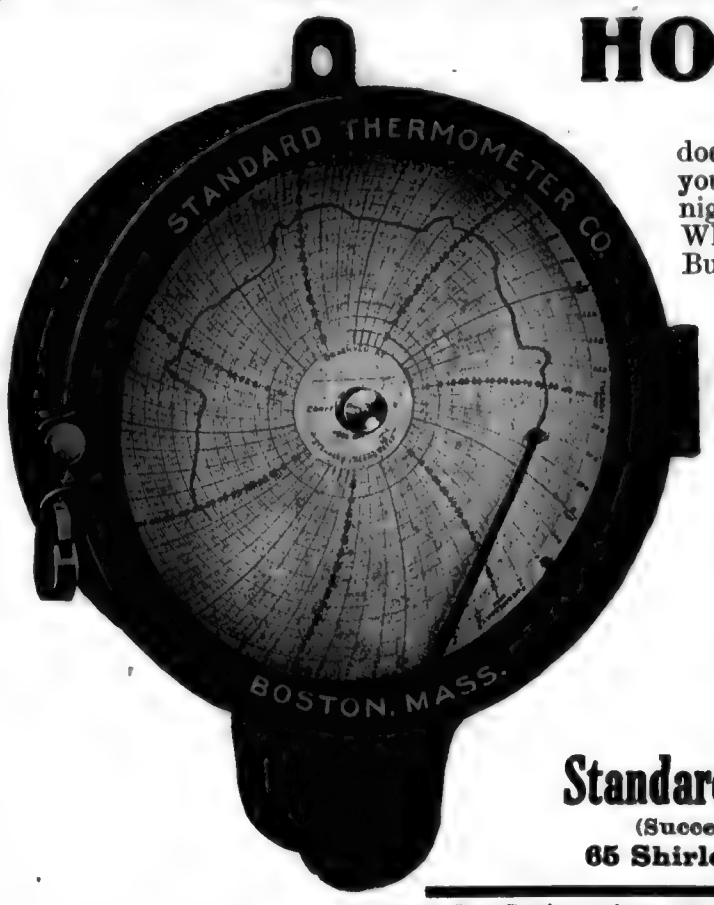
Greenhouse Heating.

THE fuel problem has begun to press some of the neglectful ones. The severe cold wave has been of unprecedented length, not only increasing coal consumption but tying up freight traffic for an unusually long time. No grower should let winter come upon him without a good reserve supply of fuel. To do so is simply to invite the worries that bring gray hair.

CONSTRUCTION OF IRON STACK.

We recently ordered a new smokestack through a local firm and we find that, instead of having the joints lap like a stove pipe, it has every other section riveted on the outside so it gives the water a chance to run into the smokestack from the outside. We should like to ask your heating department whether that is the proper way to construct a smokestack. G. F. C.



Smokestacks are made like the one described and also with one section overlapping the section next below it, either on the outside or on the inside, the latter form being preferable. One objection to having the upper section lap over the outside of the lower section, is that the creosote and other products of combustion condense inside the chimney and, running down, soak out through the cracks and stain the outside of the chimney. The small amount of water which will work inside the chimney will do practically no harm. It has also been found that a better draft can be obtained when the lap of the sections is the other way.

CONTROL OF TEMPERATURES.

Kindly submit the following to your heating expert: We have two connected houses, each 18 x 75, without a partition between them. In each house there are three benches. The outside benches are against the walls, with three 2-inch pipes beneath. There are two pipes near the side of each narrow bench and two at each side of the wide center benches, but all pipes are under the benches. The houses have been used only two weeks and everything works finely except in one particular. The experts said we could maintain a rose temperature in one house and a carnation temperature in the other. We find that the best we can do is to produce a difference of 3 degrees in the north house by shutting off pipes in the south house, except when the wind is in the south, when the difference is 5 to 7 degrees in favor of the north house. How can we remedy this? What is the objection to having heating pipes under rose or carnation benches? These houses are even-span and we find that the south house somewhat shades the north house. Will it be advisable to put either roses or carnations in the north house?

If this can not be arranged satisfactorily, we expect to erect another house, 18 x 75, connected to the present south house and to be used especially for roses. This house would be entirely separate from the rest, with a walk at the south side and with heating pipes on the walls; or how is it best to

COLD WEATHER

DOES NOT BOTHER THE FLORIST WHO USES THE

Wilks Hot Water Boilers

MADE ENTIRELY OF STEEL

S. WILKS MFG. CO., Chicago. January 13, 1912.

Gentlemen:—

We are having the very best results from the big boiler (30x48 Wilks Heater) now in use on the farm, and I cannot too highly congratulate you on the way it is giving us service, for this morning we have 36 degrees below zero and the "big fellow" just kept the greenhouse standing at 57 degrees from 8 o'clock last night until 6 o'clock this morning without any attention.

Yours very truly,
H. F. BOTT, Altoona, Pa.

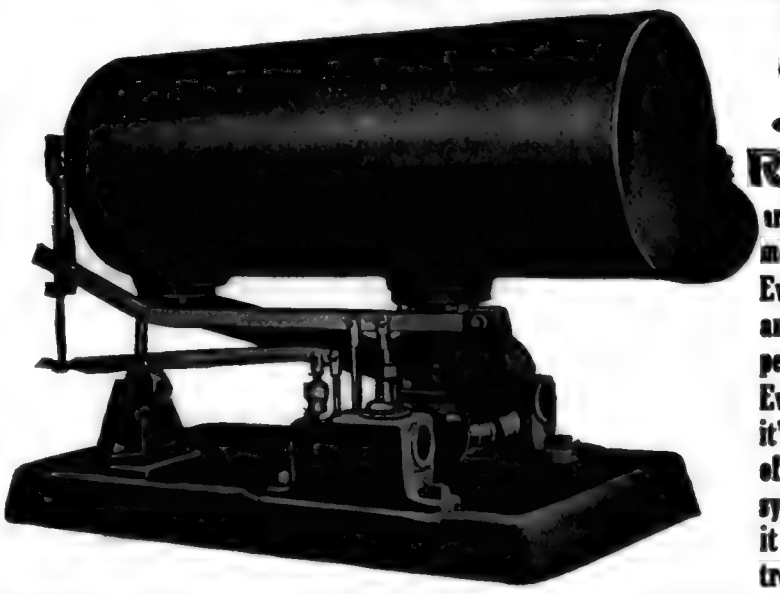
have the pipes for roses only? How many 2-inch pipes will be needed? We have a Scotch marine boiler, of fifteen horse-power. Will it heat the whole range sufficiently? We have two 2½-inch flows in each house and should like to have the same arrangement in the proposed house. If we erect this south house for roses, we shall use the middle house for carnations and the north house for bedding plants. What fault can you find with this arrangement, considering that there is no partition wall between the two present houses? Our location is northern Ohio.



A. A. C.

If there is no partition between the houses and each house contains two 2½-inch flow pipes and nine 2-inch pipes, it is not strange that there should be only a slight variation in the temperature, as there could only be such a difference as would be due to unequal exposure, or to the wind. Both houses seem to be piped about right for roses. If one house is to be used for carnations—and the north house would be the better for them—it should be shut off from the other house and the circulation cut off in two or three of the return pipes.

It is generally a good thing to have at least one-half of the return pipes under the benches in both rose and carnation houses, but a better circulation can be obtained when the flow pipes are on the plates, or overhead. Especially when steam pipes are placed under the benches, care must be taken to wet down the beds so that the under portion of the soil does not dry out, as will often be the case when the watering is carelessly done.

If a rose house, 18 x 75, is to be built, it can be heated by means of two 2½-inch flow pipes and nine or ten 2-inch returns; the latter number should be used if there are two feet of glass in the south wall, as will be desirable. A fifteen horse-power boiler should prove amply large for three houses, each 18 x

75 feet. The proposed plan for using the houses should work satisfactorily if the north house is used for plants that grow well at 55 to 60 degrees, and if a part of the radiation is shut off in the carnation house. While a temperature of 50 degrees answers well for most kinds of carnations, some varieties like 52 to 55 degrees, but none of the common varieties of roses do well unless kept at about 60 degrees and a few sorts should have 63 degrees.

BOILER PROBABLY TOO SMALL.

I have one greenhouse, 20 x 66, with 4-foot side walls and a height of about nine feet to the ridge, and with two feet of glass in the south wall. The house is attached to the west side of my dwelling. There is a glass partition, making two rooms, 20 x 30 and 20 x 36. I heat the east room to 50 degrees and the west room to 45 degrees. The outside temperature in this part of North Dakota frequently ranges from zero to 20 degrees below. I have a Wilks boiler, 30 x 42, with a 3-inch opening. I use hard coal. Will this boiler heat another house, 22 x 40, built on the west end? It will have an iron frame, with a cement wall six feet high, three feet under the ground level and three feet above the ground. There will be thirty-two inches of glass in the south side and the west end. I want a carnation temperature. The boiler is in a pit, eight feet deep, north of the west house and near the center.

A. D. S.

To maintain temperatures of 50 and 45 degrees, respectively, in the two rooms, under the severe conditions mentioned, will require at least 450 square feet of radiation, and the house which it is proposed to add will require nearly as much more. A Wilks heater with a grate measuring 30 x 42 inches is rated by the manufacturers as good for 600 square feet of radiation and hence it would be hardly safe to use it for heating both houses. While the grate areas in the Wilks heaters are unusually large for their rating and they might exceed it for short periods, there would necessarily be a waste of fuel.

Detroit, Mich.—M. Bloy delivered an address before a prominent organization of society ladies January 10, his subject being "Hardy Roses; Their Care and Protection."

will always be maintained in your steam pipes, no matter how the pressure at the boiler fluctuates, if you equip your main lines with these valves. Carry 40 or 50 pounds pressure on the boiler, set the

THE QUICKEST WATER HEATER IN THE WORLD

Establishment of Christ. Winterich, Defiance, Ohio. A No. 12 Kroeschell Boiler heats entire plant, including hotbeds.

Kroeschell Boilers Give Satisfaction

Your No. 12 Kroeschell Boiler is taking care of 18,000 sq. ft. of glass, and it will carry 24,000 sq. ft. of glass, and maybe 30,000 sq. ft. of glass. Have no trouble keeping temperature at 50° to 60° in the coldest weather. Fire boiler in fall and spring late in evening and again early in morning; during the winter season I have a night man. Boiler has given entire satisfaction.

I had three cast iron boilers, but the Kroeschell is the quickest heater, and I can safely say that it saves 20% of fuel, at least, compared to the cast iron boilers I had.

The Kroeschell Boiler for me.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The Market.

The longest cold spell in many years, with the thermometer hovering about zero, paralyzed business last week, the dullness being felt by all the local florists. Notwithstanding the cold, there was a great deal of sunshine, and carnations especially came into the market in great quantities, although the quality was not especially good.

No sooner had the Christmas specials been put aside than the spring flowers began to pour into the market, and they are seen everywhere. There are enough flowers in all lines to take care of the demand, with no great glut in any of the items.

Various Notes.

At the meeting of the bowling club last week the attendance was small, due undoubtedly to the severe weather. Mrs. Edwin Wilson made a high score.

J. B. Keller Sons are growing fine daffodils for cutting, and splendid yellow and red tulips in pans.

George Hart and William Keller are home from the Detroit rose show.

The retiring president, George B. Hart, was given a vote of thanks for his efficient administration. No action was taken on the resolution introduced by Fred W. Vick to reduce the annual dues from $2 to $1, a motion to table the resolution until the February meeting prevailing. At the conclusion of the meeting luncheon was served. It is planned to continue the monthly addresses and at the February meeting George Arnold will discuss "Annuals."

A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

The Market.

With the thermometer hovering around the zero point and about two inches of snow on the ground, trade has slackened up a good deal, though enough business is done to keep all stock used up, as the supply is light. Roses seem to be the most plentiful and are being used for all occasions. Carnations, as usual at this time of the year, are quite scarce. Paper Whites and Romans are coming in, but are not nearly so plentiful as at this time last year. Some few jonquils are to be seen, but they are shipped in. It is a little too early for other bulbous stock and it will not be ready for a fortnight, at least. Sweet peas, violets and valley are about equal to the demand. The demand for orchids and gardenias has been light since the first of the year, as there has not been much doing in society. Funeral work has been the main feature, though at no time has there been a rush, just enough to keep stock cleaned up.

Galax leaves, magnolia and other prepared stock have been used to good advantage, owing to the shortage of fresh flowers. There is not much to be had in potted plants at present; a few azaleas are about all. Some few primroses are coming in, but will improve in quality as the season advances. Green goods have been in good supply.

K. R.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Gustave Bartholme has not been in first-class trim since the holiday rush; the extra strain tells for some time. The weather was fine and a record business was the result.

Have Tomatoes on the market weeks ahead

Never mind the weather!

Your plants in hot-beds or cold-frames under Sunlight Double Glass Sash will not mind it

Between the two layers of glass in the Sunlight Double Glass Sash is an air space of ⅝ of an inch in thickness

Above the glass is winter weather—zero perhaps. Below the glass is warm earth and plants growing like May

The secret of it all, is that the air space between the two layers of glass being a non-conductor will not let the cold in or the heat out. It makes the Sunlight Double Glass Sash complete in itself. It needs no mats or boards. The only cover is the air sealed between the layers of glass.

You can have hot-beds and cold-frames with Sunlight Double Glass Sash far cheaper in the long run than your single layer sash with heavy, dark covers of mats or boards. You can save more than half the labor and worry and you can control your beds better and get earlier, stronger and far more profitable plants.

The Sunlight Double Glass Sash method comes right home to every gardener and florist in the country It is good business to learn all about it.

Write us today. We will send our complete catalog, free. If you enclose 4c in stamps we will also send Prof. Massey's booklet on hot-beds and cold-frames. Be sure to write your name and post office plainly.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

CASKET COVERS BOSTONESE.

The Boston Cut Flower Co., at 14 Bromfield street, Boston, is one of the Hub's up-to-date and growing retail stores. W. Rosenthal, the proprietor, has built up a splendid business of late years and his design work is especially good. He captured several prizes for his work at the National Flower Show when held in his city.

The pall illustrated was made for the officers and men of the U. S. S. Monongahela, of which the late Rear Admiral Evans' son is captain. This was sent to the funeral of Fighting Bob. White Killarneys were used in the make-up, showered with white sweet peas, the border being single violets and asparagus. A cluster of Richmond roses at the right and violets at the left gave the necessary natural colors. A base of white carnations was used below the name of the battleship.

W. N. C.

A DETROIT DECORATION.

What is no doubt the largest decoration of the season to date in Detroit is shown in the illustration on page 11. It was for a reception in Strassburg hall, and took place on Thursday, January 11, the day on which the florists of Detroit entertained the trade visitors at a smoker at the Cadillac hotel. Some of the visitors had an opportunity of seeing the decoration while it was being put up, and will be specially interested in the illustration. The work was by the Bemb Floral Co., of which Albert Pochelon is proprietor. The color scheme was pink, green and light blue. The pink was supplied by the Killarney roses that were used in quantity, the green by the wild smilax, much of which went into empire wreaths, and the pale blue by chiffon and netting of that color.

COOPER'S STORE.

The illustration on page 10 is reproduced from a photograph of George H. Cooper's store at 833 Fifteenth street, Denver. It shows the store as it looked just after Christmas, when an itinerant photographer happened in, and the picture was taken without preparation. The absence of blooming plants shows that the Christmas business was all that could be desired.

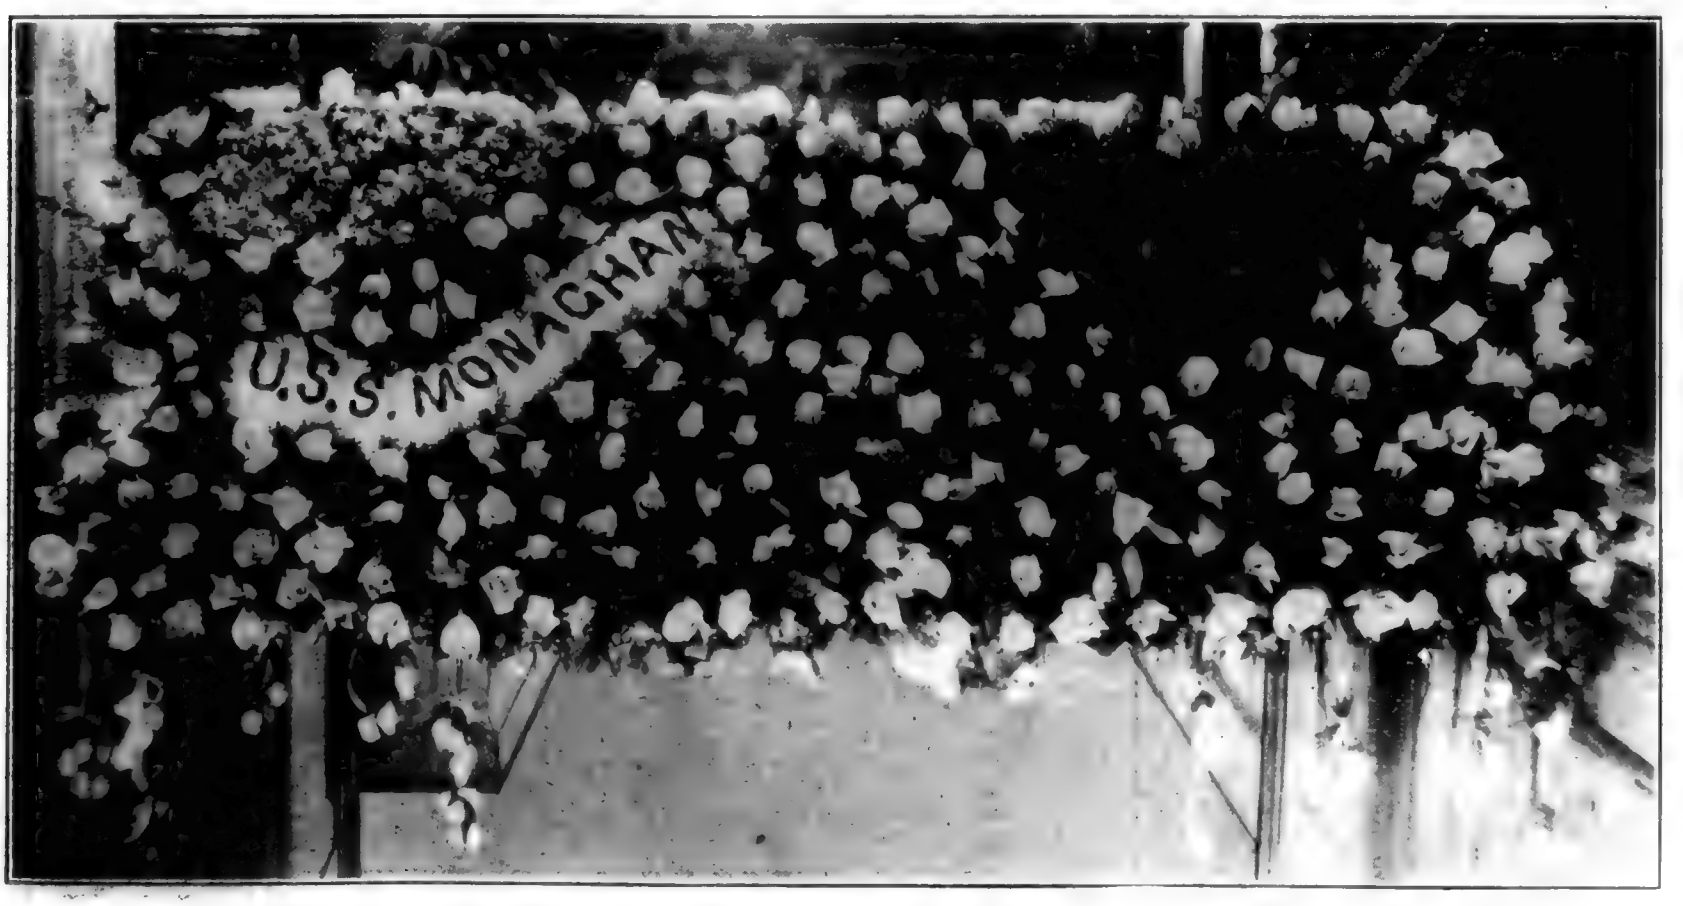
M. R. J.

A UNIQUE ADVERTISEMENT.

The illustration on page 11 is a small reproduction of a unique three-column advertisement recently used in an Indianapolis Sunday paper by Bertermann Bros. It appeared during the severely cold weather, when the business of all retail florists was largely confined to telephone trade, and was, of course, designed to feature that method of ordering flowers.

MR. GRACEY'S NEW CAR.

The uptown section of Philadelphia boasts some progressive florists. John C. Gracey, who conducts two large stores uptown, is one of the leaders in that section. Proof lies in the illustration of his new delivery car, 1912 model, on page 10. You know it hasn't been 1912 so very long, and it takes time to make a photograph, so you will understand how progressive is Mr. Gracey when I tell you that this photograph was received on the second day of January, 1912. Phil.



THE POPULAR PRIMROSES.

Primula Sinensis.

While the various primroses are in flower is a suitable time to make the main sowing for flowering next winter. For Christmas trade such forms of Primula Sinensis as Crimson King, Chiswick Red, Chelsea Crimson and Chelsea Scarlet are excellent. The demand for high colors is usually better than that for whites, pinks and blues, but some of the latter can be sold, especially the pinks and whites. Seed should be sown in shallow pans of leaf-mold and sand. Loam is better omitted and flaky leaf-mold is better than that which is too much decayed. Cover the seeds lightly, lay sheets of glass over them after watering, shade from sunshine, and keep in a warm, moist house until germinated. Then gradually move them to cooler quarters, say 50 degrees at night.

Primula Obconica.

That pretty and interesting primula, obconica, has been marvelously improved of late years. It is, in spite of its somewhat poisonous properties, still a popular commercial plant. To secure good plants for the Christmas trade, sow now and treat as you do the P. Sinensis. Secure the grandiflora strain, which is a vast improvement over the old type. There are several colors, but white, pink and rosy red are the best sellers. Of course seed of P. obconica can be sown as late as the end of April and give good plants for flowering the following winter or spring, but you do not want to wait as late as that for your Christmas plants. Start them going now and you are all right.

Primula Kewensis.

The beautiful, fragrant, bright yellow Primula Kewensis has jumped into popular favor the last year or two and this is not to be wondered at, for as a winter flowering plant it is among the finest acquisitions we have had in late years. The erect flower spikes rise twelve to eighteen inches in height and are produced in great profusion for several months. This is a more robust grower than either Sinensis or obconica, and to be seen at its best requires somewhat larger pots. It also should have an abundant water supply at all times, but especially when in flower. If at this stage it becomes dry, all the tubelike flowers will wither. Some there are who have frowned on it for this reason, but keep it moist and it is one of our finest decorative plants. To keep it in good condition the plants, however, must be looked over two or three times weekly and fading flowers removed. Its treatment does not differ from that of the other greenhouse primulas.

Store of George H. Cooper, Denver, Colo.

Primula Malacoides.

The comparatively new Primula malacoides is being offered this season by several American seedsmen. It may be described as a much glorified and improved P. Forbesi. It is more robust and graceful than the old baby primrose. It has been shown in Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston quite recently and was admired at each place. Here is a good florists' plant just as easy to grow as P. obconica, not in any way poisonous, with dainty blue-pink flowers, which are produced in great profusion, and as it naturally flowers earlier than P. obconica it should be given a fair trial as a Christmas plant. It succeeds under precisely the same treatment as the other primroses.

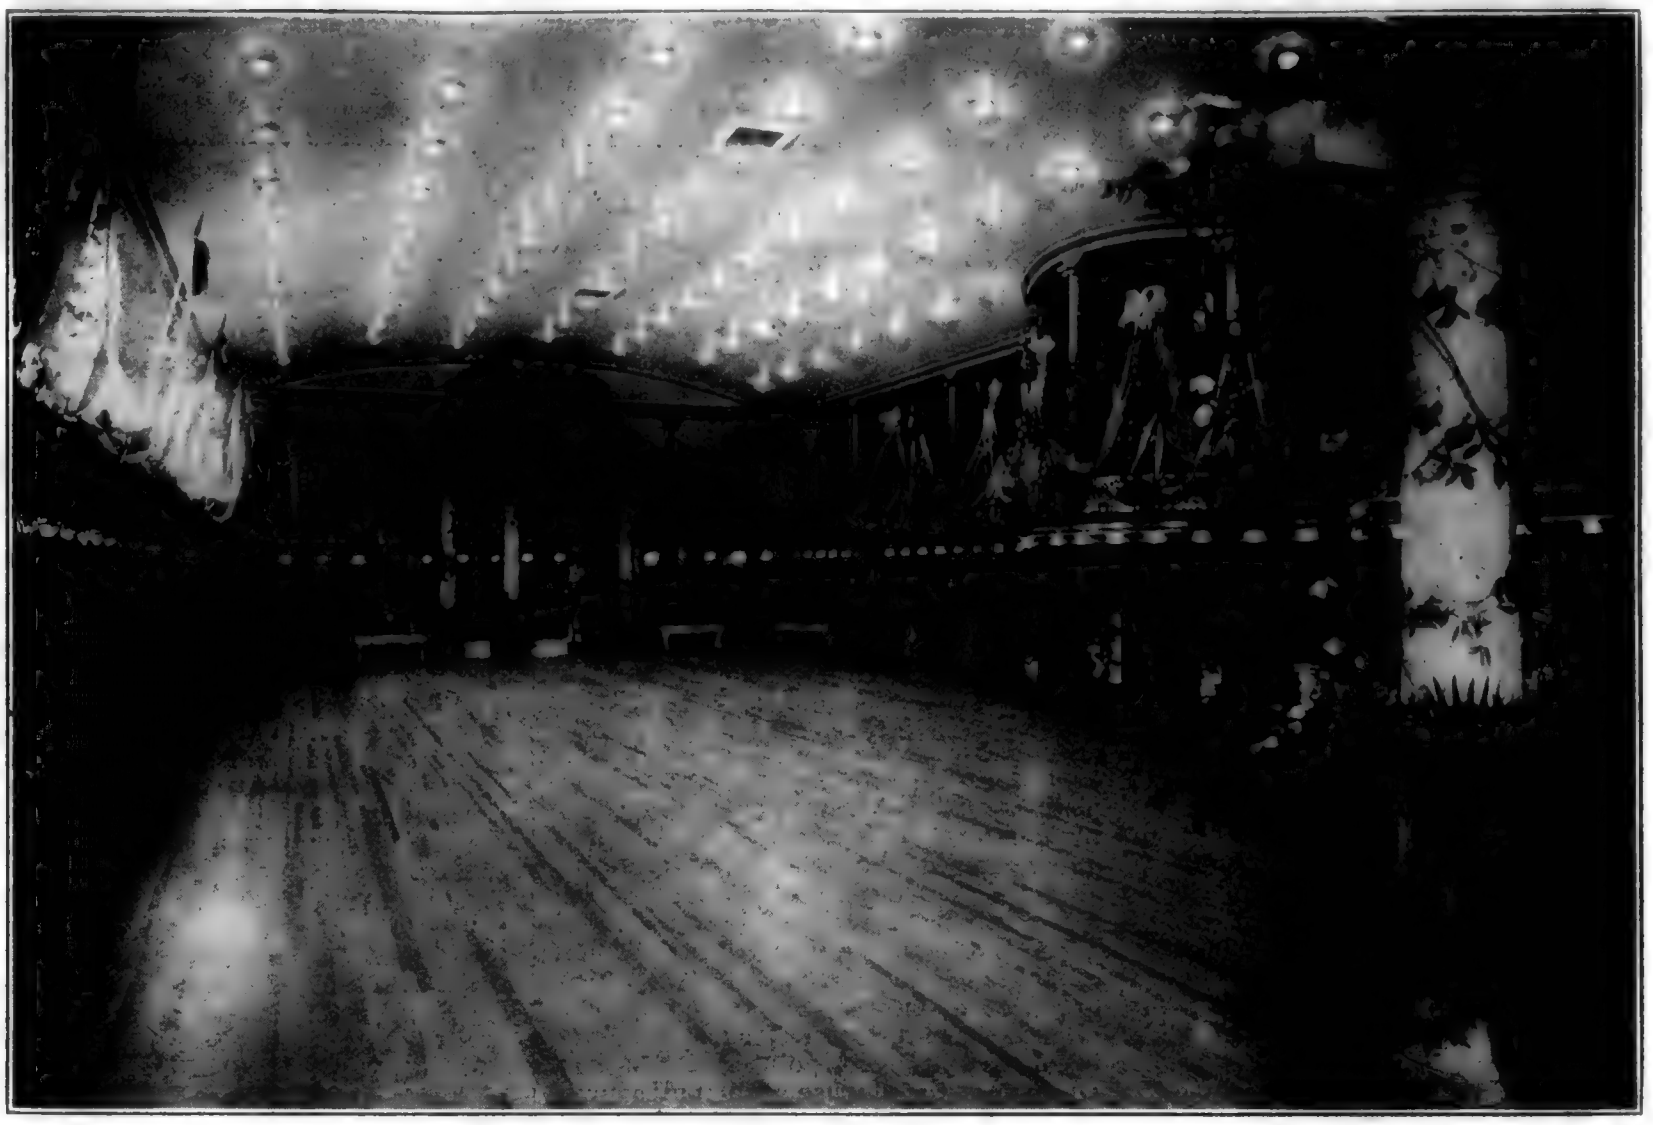
Primula Vulgaris.

The common English primrose is popular as a winter flowering plant, both in pots and grown in benches for bunching. This variety is hardy with light protection even in North America, and its outdoor culture might well be considerably extended. Seed sown now in a temperature of 50 degrees at night will germinate, if fresh, in a few weeks and can, when large enough, be pricked off into flats, which can be hardened off so that the seedlings can be planted out early in May, before really hot weather sets in. This primula prefers a little shade, but this is not necessary, for we have for years grown splendid plants in the sunniest location we have. These seedlings should be well cultivated all summer and not lifted until they have a few freezings. They can then be potted or benched. For a succeeding year the forced plants can be divided and planted out as in the case of seedlings. In addition to the yellow form, which is the most popular, there are several other colors. There are also the various forms of P. elatior, better known as Polyantha, which are splendid for cutting. Of these the Giant White, Giant Yellow and Gold-laced are specially desirable. P. elatior wants just the same treatment as P. vulgaris and will be found a desirable plant to use in benches in a cold house for winter flowering. Primulas all enjoy a rather light but moderately rich compost, the hardy sorts being no exception to this rule in America, although they in some cases resent it in Europe.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

The spring show of the National Horticultural Society of France will be held in Paris May 15 to 22, inclusive.

F. Sander, of Sander & Sons, St. Albans and Bruges, has been seriously ill, but has now recovered from an operation which his medical advisers considered necessary. He is now assured by the doctors of renewed health and vigor, and his many friends offer their congratulations.



The International Horticultural Exhibition, London, is the absorbing topic of 1912. Four thousand pounds sterling are offered in prizes, as well as numerous cups and trophies. Exhibits are expected from France, Italy, Germany, Holland and Belgium. A commission has been given by an American gentleman for a remarkable piece of garden statuary, on the express condition that it be shown at the exhibition. Interesting exhibits are promised from Japan and Canada, and Australia will also be represented.

The Netherlands Chamber of Commerce is organizing a novel exhibition, to be held in the Olympic grounds, London, England, and to consist of Dutch houses and market gardens and a bulb field with over 50,000 bulbs in bloom. The grounds will be intersected by canals, spanned by typical Dutch bridges. Lime trees, trained fan-shape, as seen at the roadsides in Holland, besides willows, shrubs, etc., will be transported from the land of windmills for the occasion.

The National Federation of French Horticulturists is holding its annual convention, from January 22 until the end of the month. In addition to attending their business meetings, the members will tour in the south of France, visiting many of the leading horticultural establishments in Marseilles, Ollioules, Hyeres, Antibes, Cannes and Nice. They will also make merry with banquets, receptions and "apéritifs." The convention meetings, or, as the Frenchmen say, "the congrés," will not occupy much time, and members will have abundant leisure amid the fields of narcissi, mimosas and violets, at the zenith of their blooming season, around Cannes and Nice.

LITTLE HOLLAND.

Frank Garland's place at Des Plaines, Ill., once was referred to in these columns as "Little Holland," but he says it hardly is entitled to the title this season, the bulbs planted not having filled quite all the flats. The plantings were as follows:

TULIPS.
La Reine	32,500
Yellow Prince	22,000
Murillo	15,000
Couleur Cardinal	9,500
Couronne d'Or	4,000
Rose Grisdelin	2,000
Keizerskroon	2,000
Cottage Maid	1,000
Total	88,000
NARCISSI.
Golden Spur	12,500
Princeps	7,500
Emperor	5,000
Poeticus	5,000
Bicolor Victoria	2,500
Von Sion	2,000
Daffs	5,000
Total	39,500
HYACINTHS.
Miniature	2,500

The French bulbs were cut down to 10,000 Paper Whites.

There are 9,000 giganteum started for Easter.

Mr. Garland is, with possibly one exception, the largest forcer of bulbs for the Chicago market. The Review would be glad to print the planting lists of other large growers anywhere.

HARRISII FOR 1913.

I should like to get some information regarding the forcing of Lilium Harrisii. As Easter comes early next year and I can not get any more heat than 55 to 58 degrees in zero weather, I think it would be impossible to get giganteum in flower in time; that is, by the middle of March, 1913. Any information, therefore, regarding the forcing of Harrisii will be thankfully received.

C. V. A.

Newspaper Adv. of Bertermanns.

Lilium Harrisii could be flowered for an early Easter in the temperature you have. Twenty years ago it was a splendid lily, free from disease. This can be said of it no longer, however. It is a tall grower and, if your sale is for pot plants, it would not suit you as well as other varieties. The Formosa type of longiflorum, while it also grows tall, is much healthier than Harrisii and could easily be flowered by the middle of March. For cutting, this is excellent, but as a pot plant it has the disadvantage of too much length. Lilium longiflorum multiflorum makes an ideal pot plant. The blooms are smaller than those of giganteum, but it comes to hand earlier and can be forced successfully in a lower temperature than giganteum. Start them in a temperature of 50 degrees, under a bench or on the floor of a shed or cellar. As soon as sprouted, move them at once into the highest temperature you can give them and they will flower on time. To be in bloom by the middle of March the buds must be in sight at the end of January, or they will be too late. It is probable that a good many giganteums will be carried in cold storage for an early Easter, as this is the most popular lily. These, if received and potted late in October, would flower in season.

GERANIUM STOCK PLANTS.

I have a house, 27 x 100, which I want to plant with geranium stock plants. The house contains solid beds, not benches. Can you tell me how closely I can plant them? I shall not plant them until next July, but I wish to get my stock ready now.

C. L. H.

Place the plants twelve inches apart each way. As you will be constantly propagating after September, this space will prove ample for the plants.

HEINL'S POINSETTIAS.

I see in The Review for January 4 a house of poinsettias. I had a house 30x100, with four benches, with 3,300 poinsettias, but when the picture was taken the two outside benches were mostly cut. We had quite a lot of traveling men who saw them and said they were as even and good size as they ever had seen. I wholesaled them all in Toledo, except a few going to Chicago. I also had an extra nice lot in pans, which sold well.

ORCHIDS

SEASONABLE NOTES.

Temperatures.

We are now at the coldest period of the year and the minimum temperatures should be at their lowest level for the year. Many plants now are or should be resting, and it is a great mistake to maintain high night temperatures, which excite the plants and are liable to start premature and weak growths. With hot water heat, the danger is less than with steam. The steam is productive of a more arid atmosphere, and it is doubtful whether it grows orchids as satisfactorily as hot water. For cattleyas the minimum should not go over 55 degrees for the next six weeks, and a drop to even 50 degrees on severe mornings will do no harm and is vastly better than finding the temperature at 58 or 60 degrees and a pronounced smell of fire heat in the house. Cypripediums should have a night temperature of 58 to 60 degrees. The insigne, Leeanum and other such sections should have the cool end of the house, and a drop to 50 degrees will be all right for them. With cypripediums, care should be taken to counteract the drying influence of fire heat by damping the floors, below the benches and between the pots thoroughly at least twice a day.

Phalænopsis enjoy heat probably as much as any orchids. Yet, even for them, 60 degrees is sufficient on cold nights. This applies to other orchids of East Indian origin. Vanda cærulea is better at 50 degrees, while such oncidiums as varicosum Rogersii, ornithorhynchum, crispum, tigrinum, flexuosum, splendidum and Forbesii are sufficiently warm in a similar temperature. Dendrobiums of the white section and hybrids at rest do not require over 45 degrees if kept dry, but those started and nearing the flowering stage require 10 degrees more heat. With all orchids, as, indeed, with all greenhouse plants, avoid high night temperatures as ruinous, and it is far better to have the houses a few degrees below the regular readings than above them.

Cleaning the Plants.

There is more time now than at any other period of the year to sponge the plants, and every spare moment is well spent at this work. With cypripediums, phalænopsis, cœlogynes, miltonias, odontoglossums, dendrobiums and other genera the sponge usually is the best cleansing medium, using some fir tree oil or other insecticide in the water. With cattleyas, lælio-cattleyas, lælias, sophro-lælias and other varieties which are more or less subject to the attacks of scale, small brushes, such as tooth brushes, and even pointed sticks are necessary to cleanse the bulbs and leaves thoroughly, especially the tops of the bulbs where the sheaths have been cut. In all these crevices scale will find a congenial harbor and it is a pest which spreads rapidly and soon injures plants. After sponging, if the cattleya growths are at all sprawly, draw them up together with raffia. This greatly improves their appearance and allows the growing of far more plants in a given space.

Shading.

Except phalænopsis, the leaves of which are liable to receive injury from even the winter sun and need a little shade in the form of cheesecloth or a light coat of whitening on the glass, practically all orchids, until the middle of February, will stand the winter sun and be benefited by it. Even cypripediums are more often than not grown too heavily shaded. The sun may give their foliage a somewhat paler hue, but the dark green color soon returns when shade is given again. Where batches of plants are in flower the cooler end of the house should be allotted to them, and here, of course, some protection from the sun's rays will be found necessary.

Potting.

The time is approaching when a great deal of potting must be done and an ample supply of osmunda fiber, fibrous loam, fresh sphagnum and clean crocks for drainage should be stored ready for use, as well as all necessary pots, pans and baskets. If time permits, the baskets can just as well be made on the place, using, of course, some durable wood. There are, and of course always will be, differences of opinion as to whether baskets or pots are best for many orchids. With cypripediums, pots or pans should always be used, as also in the case of odontoglossums, oncidiums, miltonias, calanthes, thunias, phaius, zygopetalums cymbidiums and epidendrums. For vandas, aerides, saccolabiums and angræcums pans or pots are generally the best to use, although Vanda cærulea, V. Amesiana and V. Sanderiana succeed well in baskets hung near the roof. Phalænopsis like deep baskets; dendrobiums, either pans of moderate size or baskets. Cattleyas, lælias and these bigeneric hybrids do best in pots or pans; not that splendid specimens may not be grown and exhibited in baskets, but the roots are under better control in pots and pans and trade growers will generally find them the most satisfactory.

Ventilation.

Plants are like human beings in that they require a constant supply of fresh air to maintain them in good health. It can be proved to an exactitude how long a man can live in a room without a supply of fresh air, by merely knowing the cubic contents of the room. Plants may be less sensitive and harder to kill, but to keep them in good condition ventilation must never be neglected. Cattleyas must have air. In a warm, stuffy house they will send their roots outside instead of inside the pots. This means half shriveled bulbs and poor sheaths. There is not a day in the year when some air can not be admitted either at the ridge or at the sides. Of course, the opening of outside doors freshens the atmosphere a little, but lifting the ventilators, if only for an hour, allows the dead air to escape and replaces it with fresh air. Cypripediums, phalænopsis, vandas, etc., enjoy a more stuffy and humid atmosphere than cattleyas, as do dendrobes, except when resting, but at least a chink of air can be given them practically every day in the year, and, be it remembered, it is always easier to heat a house into which fresh air has been admitted than one kept sealed tightly in severe weather. During windy weather, sufficient air to take away the stuffiness may come through the laps of the glass, but snow and severe frost close these entrances and we must supply the ventilation ourselves. There is a strong, popular misconception in many minds regarding orchids, that they are tropical subjects from hot, sweltering localities, and must be treated accordingly, but, as a matter of fact, a rose house temperature is sufficiently high for almost any variety and too warm for many.

CROP TO REPLACE SMILAX.

I have a bed of smilax, 5x88 feet, containing about 1,000 plants. The fourth crop is nearly ready to go off and I doubt much whether it would make a profitable fifth crop. I would prefer planting it with some easily grown, profitable flowers, if I were sure they would bring as good returns as the smilax. How about chrysanthemums or sweet peas? I should like to get some profit from the crop this spring if possible. Name the months in which mums can be sold in market. H. C. B.

Chrysanthemums are mainly sold in October and November, a small number only coming earlier and later. Sweet peas would be an excellent and profitable crop to grow. The soil for them would require to be fresh and well enriched, in the proportion of three parts loam to one part well decayed cow manure. If this manure is not obtainable, use that from sheep or horses. The seed can be sown now in flats or small pots and afterward transplanted, placing the plants four inches apart in the rows. For an early crop, sow such varieties as Mont Blanc and Burpee's Earliest of All. Any of the sorts usually grown outdoors can also be sown now. Among these, Countess Spencer, White Spencer, Dorothy Eckford, Frank Dolby and Helen Lewis are all of popular selling colors. Sweet peas like a light, roomy house, and while they can be grown quite cool up to the flowering stage, they succeed best when given a night temperature of 48 to 50 degrees. These figures should not be exceeded.

There are other crops which you could grow, and which, if started now, would yield you good money this spring. Among these are ten weeks' stocks or candytuft for Memorial day. Double feverfew is also a good crop for the same holiday. Gladioli, such as America, Shakespeare and Augusta, always sell well; planted now, they would flower from the end of April until early in June, after which you could either replant with smilax or grow chrysanthemums for a fall crop, following these with single violets, sweet peas, snapdragons or some other flowers for winter or early spring blooming. BLACK'S CARNATIONS.

The accompanying illustration is prepared from rather poor photographs supplied by Charles A. Black, Jr., Hightstown, N. J. It shows two views of the same bench of White Perfection carnation as it appeared in November. The plants are supported by a device of Mr. Black's own invention and home make, for which he has applied for a patent under the name of the Eureka Carnation Support.

CARNATION RUST.

I am sending a carnation that is diseased and I should like to know what to do. The trouble is spreading fast. My carnations were bedded in September and the trouble commenced a short time afterward. F. W. H.

Your carnations are attacked by the common carnation rust, and there is really only one way to get rid of it. That way is laborious and slow, but effective. Set your men to work picking off all the diseased leaves and, when that is done, spray the plants thoroughly with Bordeaux mixture. There is no known remedy that will destroy the rust without destroying the parts affected. Several years ago an arsenic solution was used in fighting the rust, but more damage was done to the plants than to the rust.

REGISTRATION IN ENGLAND.

The Perpetual Flowering Carnation Society, in England, has published a list of the registrations of new varieties from January 1 to December 31, 1911. Twenty-eight varieties are included. Registration has become an international affair, the English society taking cognizance of American registrations. The list shows the following:

"British Triumph, seedling, brilliant crimson, by C. Engelmann. This variety was originally registered Triumph, but as it has since transpired that the name was already appropriated in America, the variety has been re-registered as British Triumph."

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

STRONG-STEMMED MUMS.

Is there any method of growing chrysanthemums in greenhouses by which stiff, strong stems can be secured? All the mums seen in this part of Utah, except the ones we grow, are shipped in from California and, of course, are outdoor-grown. V. A. A.

Chrysanthemums grown in light, well ventilated houses have excellent stems, and will always be far superior in quality to the outdoor stock referred to. Cuttings taken from the middle of April until the end of May will give plants which will produce fine flowers. Benching should be done not later than the end of July, and a month earlier is better. There are some varieties which are naturally weak necked, but there are dozens of splendid sorts with rigid stems. Do not let your plants become too potbound before benching them. Give them a reasonable space to grow in, and good soil. Soil containing three parts fibrous loam, one part rotted cow manure and some fine bone is suitable. Spray freely during the hot weather. Never mind how hot the day may be; the plants are refreshed by waterings overhead and frequent dampings of the floors. Gradually decrease the syringings as cool weather advances. Never grow your mums warm; they want abundant ventilation on every possible occasion and there are really no days in your latitude when the ventilators need be closed. C. W.

YELLOW SPORT OF BYRON.

I grew fifty plants of Alice Byron and this fall I had a sport from it. The sport came from the bottom of the plant and I let it grow because it was so strong. When it came in bloom it was pure yellow. It grew four feet high and the flower was a little larger than Major Bonnaffon. The shape of the flower is the same as President Taft. I would like to have your advice what to do with it. Let me know through your paper if this mum is a new one. If so, state how I can get it established. J. G.

I do not know of a yellow sport from Alice Byron, but it is entirely within the bounds of possibility for one to come. J. G. should propagate all the plants he can from this particular variety, and after another year he may have enough blooms to exhibit this sport before a committee of the Chrysanthemum Society, who are expert growers and in a position to tell him whether it is a genuine sport of Byron or something else that might have been inadvertently mixed with this variety. FELTHOUSEN'S START.

At Schenectady, N. Y., E. V. B. Felthousen has the commencement of an extensive new range in two Lord & Burnham houses, one 20x170 and one 30x170, planted August 1 with chrysanthemums in solid beds, from which a cut of 9,300 blooms were marketed. The houses are connected with a potting shed. One house is shown in the accompanying picture. The range on the old location will eventually be torn down and removed to the new place farther out, where there is plenty of room, excellent soil and a good water supply. In addition to being a thorough craftsman, Mr. Felthousen has held a responsible position in the city post-office for a quarter of a century. M.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

C. W. Johnson, secretary of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, supplies a tabulated copy of the work of the examining committees for 1911, which has been published in The Review from week to week during the season, and the following announcements: President Charles H. Totty has appointed the following gentlemen to serve as the executive committee: Elmer D. Smith, Adrian, Mich.; David F. Roy, Marion, Mass.; William Turner, Oceanic, N. J.

Elmer D. Smith & Co. offer for the Chrysanthemum Society's exhibition for 1912, for the best twelve blooms of Chrysanthemum Manhattan shown in one vase, on long stems, a first prize of $15 and a second prize of $10, open to private gardeners only.

CYCLAMEN MITE.

Will you kindly advise me what is the matter with my cyclamens? They have formed nice plants, but they are not flowering as they should. They have had lots of buds, but when they were about one inch long they dried up, and what buds did make flowers were inferior ones. I am sending a sample of the dried buds and the inferior flowers. There are 526 in pots now, and the pots are full of fresh roots. The soil I used in which to grow them consists of a mixture of three bushels of loam, one bushel of rotted manure, one bushel of leaf soil, one-half bushel of peat, plenty of fine charcoal and enough sand to make it porous. Kindly let me know it I should grow the plants in partial shade all of the time or only through the summer. I put them in the house from the frames the last part of September in a temperature of 52 to 55 degrees, and some I have in a house at a temperature of 60 to 65 degrees at night. J. W. C.

Your compost was just what cyclamens like, with the possible omission of the peat. Your treatment also seems to have been correct. You have been unfortunate enough to have had a bad attack of cyclamen mite. This causes the leaves to become somewhat deformed, but practically all flowers are useless, as you describe yours as being. Many good growers, who have given their plants every care and possible attention, have had plants ruined as yours are. No remedy for this mite is known. I have used about every known insecticide on affected plants, without result. Some growers claim good results from the free use of tobacco dust, but I have been unable to get much comfort from it. All you can do is to throw away every plant and start afresh. It is no use carrying them over, as the probability is that they would be just as bad another season.

The plants while in coldframes need protection from the sun's rays all through the hot months. In hot weather the sashes are better only used in case of drenching rains, lath shadings being used above the plants, the shades being elevated above the plants six to eight inches. Gradually reduce the shade as summer declines. Reverse sashes at night and on cloudy days. After being taken into the greenhouse, little or no shade should be needed. C. W.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Seed Supplies.

The seedsmen have, in most cases, issued their catalogues, and at no season of the year is there more time to examine them than now. Early orders are always appreciated and any florists who have not yet made out their lists should do so forthwith. There are several excellent reasons why seeds should be ordered early. One is that we then have our supply at hand whenever we want to sow anything and do not need to send a hurry-up order to our seedsman when he is buried with business. A second good reason is that by ordering now we get prompt delivery, which is impossible a few weeks later. The seedsman also appreciates these early orders, as without them the volume of business later in the season would be almost overwhelming. Do not buy cheap mixtures of seeds. A few special colors always are popular. Others sell indifferently, if at all. As a rule, separate colors are best to buy, and get the best quality. There are always a few novelties worthy of a trial. Never mind if all do not come up to expectations. If you secure one really good new thing it is worth a little time spent in trying out a number to secure it.

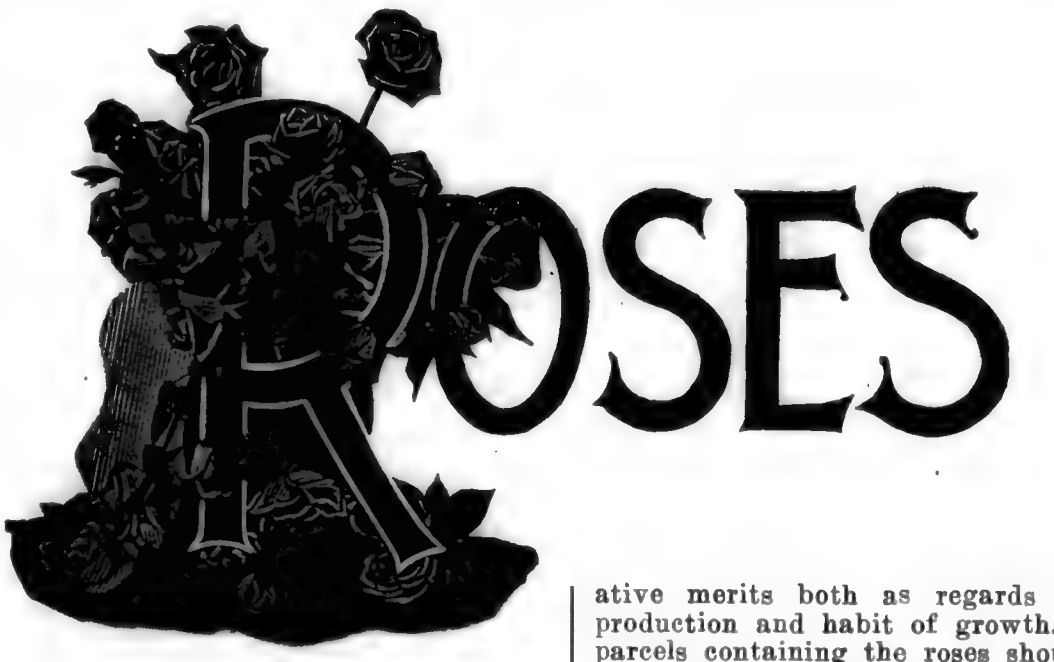
Jerusalem Cherries.

If you want nice, bushy plants of the Jerusalem cherry, Solanum Capsicastrum, sow the seeds now. You can also propagate by means of cuttings, but the latter, while they ripen early, never make neat plants like seedlings. They are sprawly and hang over the pots too much. Seed will soon germinate if sown in pans in a warm house. Do not keep too warm; once they are through the soil 50 to 55 degrees should not be exceeded. Pot off singly when large enough to handle. Gradually harden and plant outdoors in May. Keep well cultivated; dig up and pot in September. Give the solanums rich ground and they will make heavily berried, bushy plants, far better than any you ever get from rooted cuttings.

Petunias.

If not yet sown, seeds of petunias should be started at once. The seeds are fine and should not be covered at all. Sow thinly, and after germinating avoid growing them too warm. If you have any shell snails around, keep a sharp watch on your seedling petunias or the snails will make short work of them. Seeds of double petunias are offered; at least the seed is guaranteed to give a percentage of doubles. The best way to perpetuate good forms of these, however, is by means of cuttings. Petunias are among the most satisfactory of all annuals for bedding purposes. They are also splendid for piazza and window boxes, vases and hanging baskets, never being out of flower the whole summer. As with other bedding plants, it is an advantage to have some of them flowering at bedding time, for it is always noticed that with the multitude the plants carrying flowers move the quickest.

Lobelias.



Both the drooping variety, L. gracilis, and the dwarf, compact forms, such as Emperor William, should be sown now. The latter is not such a success as a bedder here as we often would wish. It has a faculty for damping off badly during spells of hot, moist, sunless weather in summer. There is, however, nothing to take its place as a blue carpeting plant. Quite often old plants are carried over in a cool house and these will now yield quantities of cuttings, which root easily and make stocky plants for bedding. The trailing varieties are useful in boxes and vases. There are white as well as light and dark blue forms, but usually the dark blue is the color mostly asked for.

Verbenas.

Unless it be to perpetuate some special color, there is no special advantage in propagating verbenas from cuttings. We do not consider they have the vigor of seedlings, and as the latter are raised so easily, it is the only method of propagation we would advise. Verbenas are everblooming annuals, excellent either for window boxes or bedding. They are desirable to use in benches in conjunction with other annuals to fill up blanks created by the removal of or dying down of Dutch bulbs. Here, again, it pays to run to special colors. Scarlet, pink and white are the leaders. By sowing now and growing only moderately warm you will get your plants in flower before the bedding-out season starts.

Hardy Perennials.

While late summer is the best time to sow most of the perennials and biennials, the present is the next best season to start a good batch of any of the popular varieties which are in demand. This list should include aquilegias, delphiniums, asters (Michælmas daisies), Chrysanthemum maximum, lupines, lychnis, hibiscus, gypsophila, pyrethrums, oriental and Iceland poppies, and campanulas. There are, of course, others, but the foregoing are among the leaders. It is too early to sow hollyhocks, unless it be the annual variety; Canterbury bells and digitalis. The plants would become unwieldy before fall. Many of these perennials, if planted out in beds or nursery rows, will flower the first season and all will make nice stock for fall planting.

BAGATELLE ROSE TRIALS.

M. J. Forestier, the Conservator of Promenades of Paris, advises that a trial of new roses will take place in the Bagatelle rosery during 1912 and 1913, as in previous years. These new roses are contributed by the raisers, and raisers who have not previously sent roses for trial should note that as far as possible the plants should have been grown in pots, that at least five plants of each variety must be sent to reach the rosery before April 15, 1912, and that if special treatment is desired, information must be sent with the roses. The roses will be planted in the beds soon after their arrival, and remain there until October of the second year, to give the members of the jury an opportunity of having them under observation during two seasons, and thus be in a position to determine their relative merits both as regards flower production and habit of growth. The parcels containing the roses should be addressed to "Monsieur de Conservateur des Promenades de Paris (Roseraie de Bagatelle, au Bois de Boulogne, à Paris) en gare de Neuilly-Port-Maillot-Paris."

FIELD KAISERINS FOR FORCING.

Are field-grown Kaiserins desirable for planting and growing inside? What is the best way to handle them?

J. G.

Field-grown Kaiserins are not nearly so good for forcing as pot-grown stock would be. If you decide, nevertheless, to use the field plants, they can be started now if you want an early crop. However, as this rose is most largely grown as a summer flowering variety, it would be better to wait until the middle of March before starting them. Prune them back moderately; remove the weak and dead wood and shorten the stronger shoots a little. Do not give a great deal of heat at first; 48 to 50 degrees at night will suffice. This can be raised gradually to 55 degrees as growth advances. C. W.

ROSES WITH OTHER PLANTS.

What effect, if any, have tomatoes and other plants on roses growing in the same house? J. G.

Though tomatoes and other plants can be grown in the same house with roses, it is much better to grow the roses alone. Tomatoes want a drier atmosphere than roses and should have a night temperature of 60 degrees. Many growers grow some vincas or other bedding plants along the edges of the rose beds or benches, but it would be harmful to plant tomatoes in the same beds. C. W.

STOCK OF HYBRID TEAS.

Kindly give me your opinion as to what stock is best upon which to bud hybrid tea roses to be grown outdoors in this latitude, in the western part of New York state. Would you use Manetti or brier, providing they are low budded, as, for instance, the Dicksons' Irish roses? I refer to such varieties as Betty, Bessie Brown, Lady Ashtoun, Lady Stanley, the Lyon rose, Joseph Hill and Jules Grolez. R. E. H.

Manetti is the stock which I have found most satisfactory, but plants on the seedling brier do well. R. multiflora, if procurable, also makes an excellent and hardy stock. You will not go far wrong in using the Manetti stock. C. W.

Portland, Me.—William Ballard, head florist at the greenhouses of Niles Nelson, was confined by illness to his home, on Glenwood avenue, for a time, but at last report had resumed his duties at the greenhouses.

AMONG THE ROSES IN EUROPE.

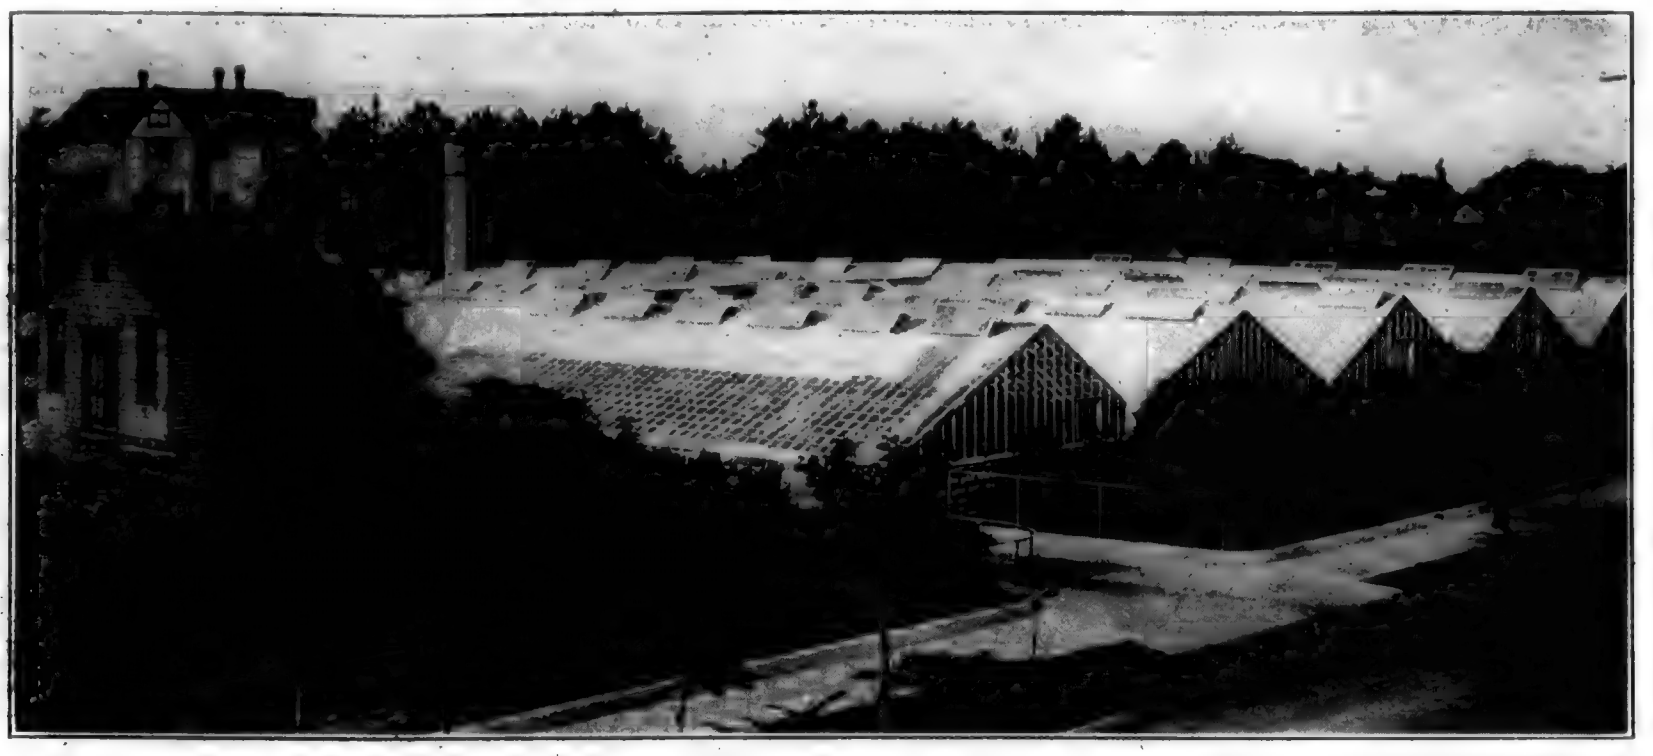
[An extract from a paper by Robert Pyle, of West Grove, Pa., read before the American Rose Society, in convention at Detroit, January 10 to 12, 1912, continued from The Review of January 18.]

I met Alexander Dickson in London at one of the shows and he told me he had crossed the Irish Sea eleven times in the previous fourteen days, going home to cut and make ready his flowers and going back to England to attend the various shows, for in rose season they are scheduled by the National Society to avoid conflict as much as possible between the more important cities, and the prominent growers are usually represented at not less than a dozen or twenty different shows in the early summer. It is tiresome work. The men go out at 4 o'clock in the morning and have orders to cut everything in sight, but this is not the beginning, for weeks in advance they have been watching, watering, shading, and they even go to the trouble of using a bit of candlewick to tie up the petals of a promising bud so that it will not open too soon. On the day of the show, or the day before, all these carefully watched and nurtured blossoms are cut and brought into the packing shed, where the proprietor is busy for hours in simply selecting, discarding and making up the assortment for the show. He usually sends twice as many as are required for the entries and again discards all that are unworthy. When all are in place, and possibly a half hour before the judges are due, the roses that have been tied up with candlewick are freed, so that the petals are allowed to open back, and are even preened so that every curl is as perfect as the human touch can make it.

I presume that there is a value in these English flower shows to the prize winner that we can scarcely appreciate in full; pictures of the trophy are published in their catalogues, a list of the prizes won is played up most prominently in their advertising literature; and unless a grower can show some prizes to his credit his chances for good business are slim. So you see the rose shows in England are an important part of the business; they not only help in advertising the grower, but they help enormously to educate the growers and the amateurs.

Go with me to the National Rose Show held in Regent's park last year. Automobiles were lined up, coming and going, a constant line of not less than fifty or sixty people awaiting entrance throughout the entire afternoon to the tent of new seedling roses, and this tent but a small, though important part of hundreds upon hundreds of entries. A military band in attendance made the affair still more attractive; society counts upon it as their day.

Another feature that appealed to me as most particularly suggestive and quite worthy of impression, where possible, was the tent devoted to roses for use in table decorations, where there were special combinations worked out. On this table would be a study of yellow with a huge bouquet in the center; smaller ones around the table, with boutonnieres or place roses.



Royalty has the first peep, and a real peep it is; so we can not wonder that our fellow growers in England spend time and thought and money and spare no pains in applying manure water to the backward plants and in shading the bleaching sun from some promising blossoms and in inventing every device that will help win the trophy. One other point: that all these shows may work harmoniously, the National Rose Society of England, as I understand, gives its support and coöperation to the local rose societies, and what I believe members of the American Rose Society need to learn is the part played there by the amateur. Men of leisure, men of means, society women and many more join with the professional growers, until among numbers of them rose growing becomes a hobby, and their contribution to the success of these shows forms an important factor. It is a point which I think our American Rose Society can not longer afford to overlook. To be sure, the interest among the English in horticulture has reached a much higher development than in America. For example, at the annual show of the Royal Horticultural Society held at Olympia, ten minutes after the doors had been opened I think there were no less than 2,000 people in the hall; people whose knowledge of flowers and whose intelligence regarding their own horticultural requirements was evidenced by their close study and deep interest. They were there with notebooks in hand, already placing their orders for the following season. And here again the value of shows to our English brothers is apparent. And do you wonder that the continental growers publish catalogues in English, send their young men to England to learn their methods and the language, and are making each year a stronger bid for business from the English amateur?

Gloversville, N. Y.—R. Loeben follows mums with a crop of radishes, and these are succeeded by ten weeks' stocks for Decoration day. Being a kinsman of Ernst Benary, of Erfurt, he obtains some of that famous seedsman's specialties for trial and reports upon their suitableness for this climate.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The cold weather is over, but the supply has not expanded. The demand is again back to normal and quickly takes up all good stock in the market. The supply of good roses seems scarcely able to cope with the requests for them. All good Beauties also easily find a market. The carnation market, too, is scarcely able to meet the calls. It is a rare occurrence to see any good stock held over until the next day. The call for lilies of all kinds is good. The bulbous line now is almost complete and all but narcissi are moving nicely. Other flowers, such as double violets, valley and orchids, are having a fair market, while good single violets and sweet peas are selling on sight. The latter are becoming an important factor.

Greens are abundant, but plumosus, according to advices from shippers, is due to shorten up considerably in the near future.

Various Notes.

C. E. Critchell finds that in spite of the severe weather, this month's business thus far has exceeded any other January business. It is due to the growth of his shipping

There was a fire scare in the Masonic Temple January 19. A stairway adjoining L. H. Kyrk's salesrooms ignited from crossed wires.

Dan Ruttle, of Latonia, usually a regular consignor into this market, has had the tables turned. He has been, for the past ten days, a heavy buyer.

Wm. Murphy last week offered a novelty to the local market in the shape of auratum lilies in January.

Last week the Grim Reaper was busy removing ones close to those connected with the local trade. Mrs. B. P. Critchell lost her sister, Mrs. J. L. Potter, of Kirksville, Mo., and Jos. Goldman, the Middletown florist, lost his mother.

P. J. Olinger went to New Castle January 22 for a week's stay.

OBITUARY.

George Murphy.

George Murphy, one of the best known of those connected with the trade in the vicinity of Cincinnati, died early Monday morning, January 22, a victim of pneumonia, at the age of 47. He was born in Delhi, O., and after he reached his majority conducted greenhouses there part of the time alone and part of the time in partnership with Charles Murphy. Subsequently he sold his plant and opened a retail store in the west end, Cincinnati. He gave this up when he was appointed to the superintendency of the flower market, a position which he held at the time of his death. A widow and four children, Hazel, Muriel, Eugene and Greta, survive him.

George Murphy was a true friend of all of the florists with whom he came into contact. He would never hesitate for a moment to go out of his way to distribute favors to his friends. All of them will mourn his death as a real loss to them. C. H. H.

Marion Warren.

Marion Warren, president of the Marion Warren Co., Rochester, N. Y., and known in the trade as the manufacturer of the Alright hose nozzle, died of heart disease December 30, 1911, at his home, 49 North Washington street, Rochester. He is survived by his wife and by a daughter, Harriett G. Stewart.

Mrs. George R. Hill.

The death is reported of Mrs. George R. Hill, who had been in the florists' business at Tyler, Tex., under the name of the Hill Floral Co. The funeral was held January 13, interment being at Oakwood. The greenhouses will be continued by Mr. Hill, who heretofore has given his attention only to brick manufacture and contracting.

Ivend Krohn.

Ivend Krohn, proprietor of the Morris Floral Co., Morris, Ill., died January 22 at the Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago, where he had been for ninety-seven days, his original illness having been typhoid. He was born in Denmark, and was 41 years of age. He came to this country with his parents when only 8 years old and had been a florist all his life. A wife and two sons survive. Interment was at Hinsdale, Ill., January 25.

William Deal.

William Deal, the well-known seed grower and merchant of Kelvedon, Essex, England, died January 2, after an illness of several weeks. He specialized in culinary peas and sweet peas, and held stocks that were second to none for purity. He handled a general line of vegetable and flower seeds, especially the brassicas, mignonette, candytuft and nasturtiums. His strains of these and others were noted for their excellence, attained by his painstaking labors, and his uprightness of character and straightforward methods endeared him to all who transacted business with him. The business will be continued by his son, Bertrand W. Deal. Deceased was a brother of E. J. Deal, managing director of W. W. Johnson & Son, Ltd., Boston, England.

Charlestown, Mass.—Winnett & Co. have removed to 20 Mystic street.

Baltimore, Md.—J. Dan Blackistone, who for several years has conducted a retail flower store in this city, last week filed a petition in bankruptcy. Mr. Blackistone is a brother of Z. D. Blackistone, of Washington, but there is no connection between the two businesses.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Mr. and Mrs. Louis A. Thiebout announce the marriage of their daughter, Anna, to Harvey E. Kidder, Wednesday, January 17, 1912. Mr. Kidder is well known to florists, being manager of the Ionia Pottery Co., Ionia, Mich., and mayor of his home town.

FATE AND FISHERMEN.

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

It is an interesting coincidence that Paul M. Bryant and Charles Morrison Dickinson met and became friends while fishing in northern Wisconsin. That was in 1910. In 1911 Mr. Dickinson induced Mr. Bryant to join him in the management of the business of E. H. Hunt, the widely known Chicago house, and with the opening of 1912 Mr. Bryant took over the majority of the stock interest held since the death of E. H. Hunt by Mrs. Hunt and her son, Mr. Dickinson, assuming the control of the corporation. It certainly was a progress of affairs unforeseen by the fishermen.

Mr. Bryant is a native of Milwaukee, born April 14, 1887, from which, if you are quick at figures, you can reckon that he will be 25 years of age the Sunday after Easter. After going through the grade and high schools of the Cream City, Mr. Bryant went into the employ of a big wholesale cigar manufacturing company, where he had several years of the best kind of business training, including manufacturing, selling, accounting and general management. He went with the Hunt corporation February 1, 1911. It is a business that dates back to 1878.

Mr. Bryant now makes his home at Park Ridge, where he has a mother and sister whose pride in him is a spur that prevents anything short of his best effort.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Weather conditions have not been particularly favorable to trade, but, on the whole, there is little cause for complaint, as clearances have been quite satisfactory. Roses are in short crop and have been selling particularly well. Beauties are rather scarce and are bringing high prices for the season. Richmond with the leading growers also is off crop. Killarneys, both pink and white, have been in demand, also the yellow varieties, Mrs. Waddell, Hillingdon and Ward. The call for Prince de Bulgarie is excellent, but the supply is not sufficiently large. Carnations are much more plentiful than roses and prices are not what they should be; few sold over $3 per hundred last week, and even now $4 is absolute top price on fancies. Violets always drop in the coldest weather, but sweet peas, which are of superb quality, are selling well. Among trumpet narcissi quite a few Victoria and Emperor now are seen, also poeticus ornatus. In tulips Thomas Moore and La Reine are leaders. There is an abundance of Freesia Purity. Pansies sell rather slowly. Stevia is over for the season. Marguerites sell well. Some superb mignonette is seen. The best makes $1 per dozen. For lilies the demand is good. Valley is less abundant, but ample for all calls. Gardenias are plentiful and of fine quality, but the demand is not robust. Cattleyas are getting overabundant also, while cypripediums are slow to move. Small lots of white lilac are seen, and among other miscellaneous flowers seen are dimorphothecas, lupines and primroses.

Club Meeting.

Ladies' night and installation of officers attracted an attendance of 350 to the meeting January 23. The new officers are: President, Thomas Pegler; vice-president, W. J. Kennedy; treasurer, Peter Fisher; secretary, W. N. Craig; executive committee, P. M. Miller, W. J. Patterson, H. H. Bartsch and William Sim. Each made short, optimistic addresses. Treasurer Fisher's report showed finances to be in a sound condition, with a good balance on the right side. The secretary reported the largest attendance at meetings in 1911 to have been 355, smallest 98, average 173. Sixty-eight new members were admitted. One report of highest merit, six reports of superior merit and nine reports of merit were made, also thirty-four minor awards to exhibits. During the year 7,500 pieces of mail were sent out.

Entertainment — W. D. Nickerson, chairman; George Butterworth, Frank Murray, George Noyes, George Harner, A. G. Sawyer, John Reid.

Eight new members were elected.

Peter Fisher showed Carnation Benora and received a report of superior merit. James Wheeler set up Princess Charming in excellent form. Sidney Hoffman showed Carnations Beacon, White Perfection, Rose-pink Enchantress and a sport of Patten. George Page brought a sport from Beacon. Montrose Greenhouses showed fine dark Killarneys. W. W. Edgar Co. exhibited a dozen genistas.

The entertainment was provided by Emmanuel Quartette, with solos by Messrs. Littlefield, Tasker, Nash and Williams, and Mrs. McKeon. Dances by the Misses Irvine were a pleasant feature.

Various Notes.

R. S. Edgar has the sympathy of the trade in the death last week of his son, 3 years old.

Henry M. Robinson & Co. say shipping trade holds up well in spite of the cold weather. This energetic firm has just opened a New York branch store for the sale of cut flowers and all kinds of sundries at 46 West Twenty-sixth street. Joseph Margolis, one of the firm, who attended the Detroit convention, enjoyed his visit there and visited friends in Saginaw, Mich., while away.

William R. Nicholson is cutting grand mignonette. He is also sending regular shipments of the same to Philadelphia. Freesia Purity and marguerites are also unusually fine at present. Mr. Nicholson will move several of the oldest houses, built by his father in 1890, and build a wide house 200 feet long to accommodate 15,000 more carnations.

John T. Gale, of Tewksbury, has fine Campbell violets, and in carnations is strong on Beacon and Fair Maid. Geo. W. Foster, of the same town, has a fine lot of carnations. Each grower's pick is handled at the Boston Coöperative Market.

J. Leach & Son, of North Easton, are cutting splendid Freesia Purity. Their carnations are also excellent, especially their new seedling, Pink Supreme.

At Galvin's Tremont street store the last week I noted some well-flowered plants of Dendrobium nobile, also cattleyas and cypripediums in variety. The new Waban Conservatories' rose, Mme. Charles Russell, showed up in great shape.

H. M. Howard, of West Newton, is having splendid success with Princess of Wales violets this season. His flowers are all handled by B. J. McGinty at the Boston Coöperative Market.

H. W. Vose, of Hyde Park, is cutting an extra fine lot of Golden Spur narcissus, La Reine tulips and Dutch hyacinths, which E. J. Rogean sells at the Boston Flower Exchange. The same salesman has grand single violets from H. L. Cox, of Winchester.

Wm. Hannan & Sons, of Dorchester, are shipping quantities of well flowered azaleas and Primula obconica to the Boston Coöperative Market.

W. R. Morris, of Wellesley, who is one of our best rose specialists, finds that while he practically loses his first crop of flowers on own-root Killarneys, they average up better than the grafted plants before the end of the season.

The Flower Growers' Sales Co. is receiving grand carnations from F. R. Putnam, Halifax Gardens Co., A. A. Pembroke and Peirce Bros. Their Killarney and White Killarney from McAlpine, of Exeter, N. H., are superb. Sweet peas in great numbers are coming from Messrs. Sim and Pembroke, valley from Wm. Jurgens and cattleyas and gardenias from Messrs. Dolansky, Roland and Peirce.

Mann Bros., of Randolph, are in the market with large cuts of Narcissus poeticus ornatus and fine Victorias, and among tulips their Thomas Moore and La Reine are noteworthy.

Malcolm Orr, of Saugus, is this year specializing in double violets and sweet peas and is having splendid success with each.

Alexander Porter, of Woburn, is sending daily shipments of excellent

Princess of Wales violets and sweet peas in variety to the Boston Co-operative Market. R. H. Little, of Winchester, at the same market, is strong on single violets.

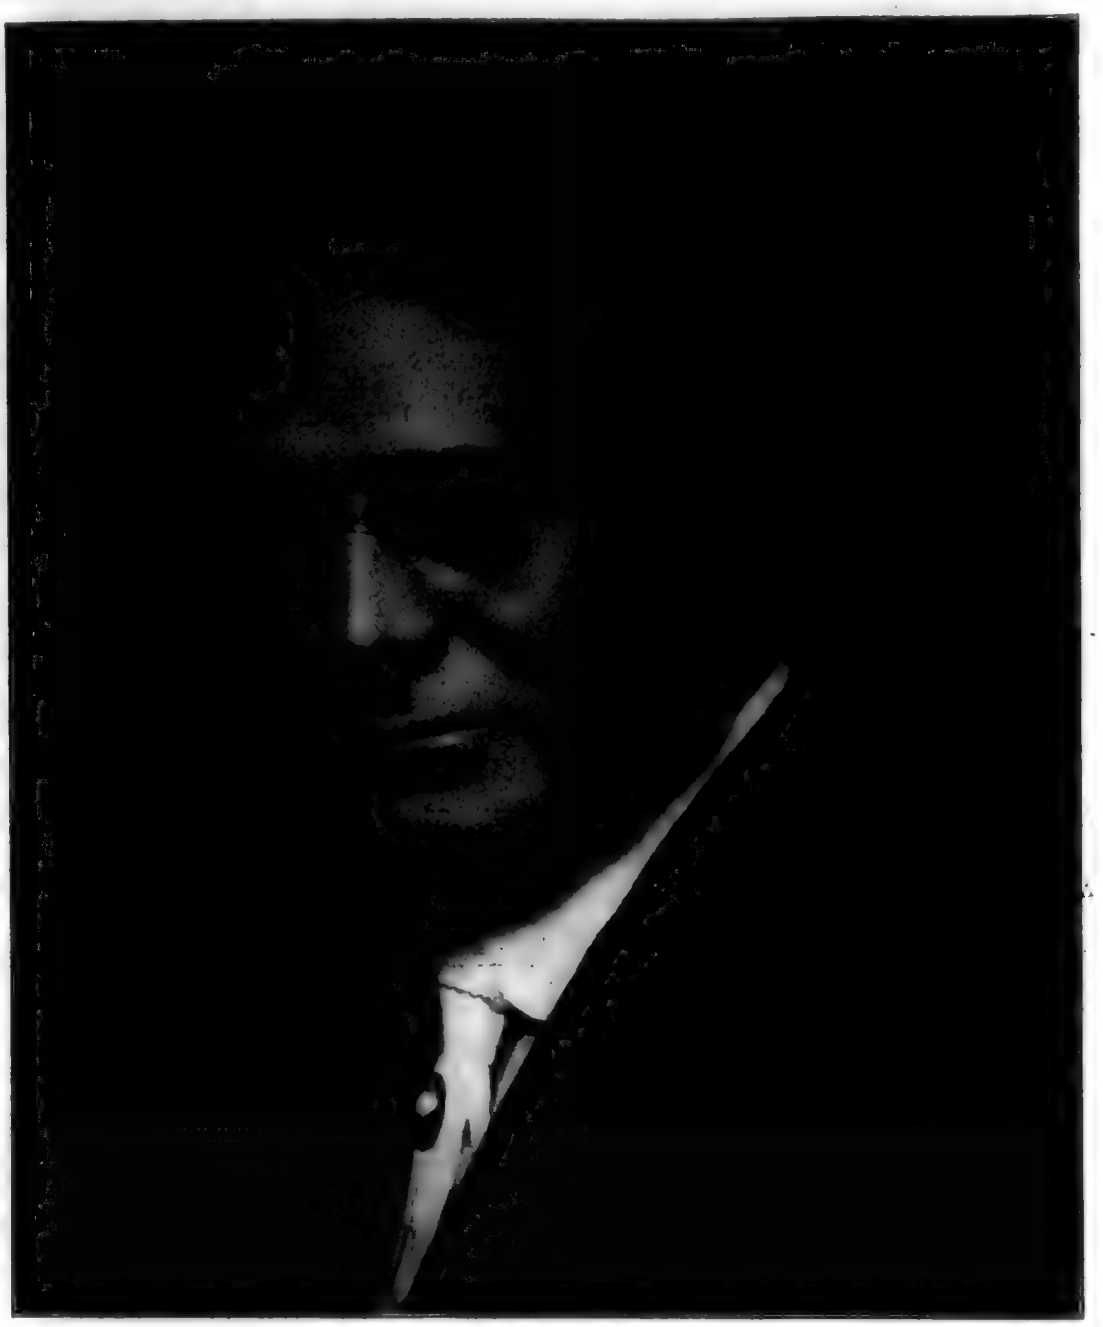
W. W. Edgar Co., of Waverley, has some excellent white lilacs and azaleas among other pot plants, and now has the houses filled to overflowing with plants for the Easter trade.

David Fairchild, of Washington, D. C., gave the regular Saturday lecture at Horticultural hall January 20, his subject being "Plant Introduction As a Government Policy." He had a large and interested audience.

The store of Mrs. J. W. Rogers, on Summer street, near the South Terminal station, always looks neat and attractive. I noted a fine vase of John Barr's new carnation, Mrs. B. P. Cheney, January 20, also a fine assortment of flowering and foliage plants.

W. N. Craig.

A. LLOYD VAUGHAN.



No great number of florists have a wider acquaintance than has A. L. Vaughan, who has just arranged to take over, February 1, the interest of his partner, Frederick Sperry, in the Chicago commission house of Vaughan & Sperry. He has traveled widely, and, though it is some years since he left the road, he is remembered pleasantly by florists from one edge of the country to the other.

A certain disposition to fight out a proposition on which he believes himself to be right may be accounted for by the fact that Mr. Vaughan was born at Bastrop, La., June 1, 1864, when hostilities between old friends were the order of the day. He had three brothers who were fighting on the Confederate side, and as many uncles who wore the blue. Arriving simultaneously at Chicago and the age of 24, the young southerner began his horticultural course in the Randolph street training school from which so many of the florists now in business at Chicago have graduated. In 1897 the firm of Vaughan, McKellar & Winterson was formed. It proved an aggregation of too much talent for those comparatively early days and in the course of time split into three concerns. After leaving Messrs. McKellar and Winterson, Mr. Vaughan spent three years traveling for the then firm of Hagemann & Meyer, New York, and later was on the road for E. H. Hunt. The firm of Vaughan & Sperry was formed October 1, 1904. The partnership will end February 1, after which date Mr. Vaughan will continue the business individually. He has a pleasant home at Oak Park, where a charming wife and daughter delight in offering hospitality.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Market.

Trade was not particularly flourishing last week; with the exception of funeral work, it has been quite light. The recent cold and cloudy weather has shortened the carnation crop, but roses are still of first-class quality. Quantities of orchids are to be had, but the demand is light. Yellow jonquils are quite in demand this year, but there are not enough to go around. Sweet peas, snapdragons, daisies and mignonette are to be had in limited quantities, while violets and valley find a steady demand.

State Association Meets.

The annual meeting of the State Florists' Association of Indiana was held at the Commercial club, Wednesday, January 17, with about thirty-five members present. President Gause was in the chair, but, owing to sickness, Secretary Baur was unable to attend, and Oliver Steinkamp was appointed secretary pro tem. President Gause read a well-prepared address, going over the last year, also offering a number of valuable suggestions. Secretary Baur's report also contained many important ideas for improvement, and the treasurer's report showed the association's finances to be in a healthy condition.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, George Gause, of Richmond; vice-president, Charles Pahud, Indianapolis; second vice-president, M. A. Barick, Seymour; secretary, Herman Junge, Indianapolis; treasurer, Homer Wiegand, Indianapolis. John Hartje was elected to membership. H. A. Maxiner and Robert Ellis were appointed to judge the exhibits, among which were vases of Princess of Wales and California violets, shown by Roepke & Rieman, and Governor Herrick violets, by H. A. Maxiner. A vase of Baur & Steinkamp's new red carnation, St. Nicholas, received a favorable report, also a vase of a seedling pink carnation, No. 843, which was scored 85 points.

The meeting was followed by a banquet and vaudeville. Considerable speech making was indulged in and the evening was enjoyed by all. Among the out-of-town members present were: George Gause, of Richmond; J. S. Stuart, J. E. A. Haugh, of Anderson; M. A. Barick, of Seymour; H. A. Maxiner, of Alexandria; H. Woodard, of Edinburg. Owing to the cold weather, the out-of-town attendance was not as large as expected.

Various Notes.

L. F. Benson's delivery automobile was demolished by a collision with a street car last week.

Bert Stanley has accepted a position with the Indianapolis Flower & Plant Co.

George Welner is back at E. A. Nelson's again. Mrs. Nelson is now able to be about, following her recent serious illness.

Henry Backmeyer, with A. Wiegand & Sons, is confined to his home with the grip.

The Pahud Floral Co. has ordered material for several new greenhouses and intends to start building in April.

The Smith & Young Co. is cutting some fine Killarney, and the Brides and Maids are also first-class.

Adolph Baur is back at work again after being confined to his home for a week with the grip.

S. S. Skidelsky called on the trade last week.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Incorporated by Act of Congress, March 4, 1901.
Officers for 1912: President, R. Vincent, Jr., White Marsh, Md.; vice-president, August Poehlmann, Morton Grove, Ill.; secretary, John Young, Bedford Hills, N. Y.; treasurer, W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, N. Y.
Annual convention, Chicago, Ill., August 20 to 23, 1912.

Results bring advertising.
The Review brings results.

J. A. Peterson's begonia, Glory of Cincinnati, is making its mark abroad. December 5, 1911, it was given an award of merit by the Royal Horticultural Society of England.

All branches of the business suffered during the severely cold weather that followed the New Year, but there has been a prompt recovery since the temperatures have risen.

Not a few subscribers save themselves the bother of annual renewal by sending The Review $2, $3, or sometimes $5, instead of the dollar-bill that insures fifty-two visits of the paper.

Yes, there is something new under the sun. The city of Toronto is not content to appoint a politician as park commissioner, but is advertising for a man with a floricultural training! Candidates should address E. R. Geary, Mayor.

The annual volume issued by the Society of American Florists was received January 18. It is unusually large this year, containing, in addition to the report of the Baltimore convention and the other usual matter, the full report of the committee which handled the national flower show at Boston last March.

Subscribers to The Review have learned to expect to receive the paper regularly in a certain delivery of mail. During the last few weeks many complaints from all over the country have been received regarding the late delivery of the paper. The fact seems to be that mail trains have been anywhere from a few hours to two or three days behind time on account of the severely cold weather. It is believed the trouble will right itself with the return of normal temperature.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

At the special meeting of the board of directors of the Society of American Florists held in Detroit, Mich., January 11, there were present President Richard Vincent, Jr., Vice-president August F. Poehlmann, Secretary John Young, Treasurer William F. Kasting and the following directors: W. N. Rudd, E. Allan Peirce, Harry A. Bunyard, C. H. Totty, John A. Evans and George Asmus. The invitation of the New York Florists' Club to hold the National Flower Show in 1913 in New York was accepted and the matter was turned over to the National Flower Show Committee to carry out the details. The board authorized the offering of three silver and three bronze medals to be awarded at the international exposition in London for plants and flowers of American origin. The committee appointed by President Asmus to have charge of local arrangements in Chicago was continued, with the name of George Asmus added. The committee now is August F. Poehlmann, J. C. Vaughan, W. N. Rudd and George Asmus. The report of August F. Poehlmann, chairman of the committee on hall for the convention, was accepted and the committee empowered to lease the Coliseum building on the terms mentioned. John Young, Sec'y.

USES ONLY THE REVIEW.

The point of the following letter is that an advertisement in The Review is sufficient to sell all the stock this florist can produce, without any other selling expense:

Enclosed please find advertising contract for one inch space for one year, from February 1, 1912. Keep on with the salvia seed advertisement in said one inch space until forbid. Discontinue the geranium advertisement in the Classified department, as we are sold out of Ricard and Presilly, with orders for other varieties booked away ahead; we would better discontinue for a few weeks to catch up. We are also nearly sold out of salvia seed, although we had a good sized crop. We advertise only in The Review. That paper certainly sells the stock. The orders keep us hustling early and late.—P. J. Siebold, Lancaster, Pa., January 19, 1912.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market has passed through a considerable change since the last report. The weather, which had been extremely cold for an unprecedentedly long time, has moderated to something like the normal January temperature. With the arrival of a temperature that would permit the buyers to get out, and the comparatively safe shipment of cut flowers, there came a prompt increase in the volume of business. The use of flowers may not yet have got back to what it usually is at this time of year, but the demand is not only heavier but much steadier than it was during the zero days.

Coupled with the increase in demand there has come a decrease in the rose crops. Roses are scarce—not so scarce as they were at this time last year, but undeniably scarce. Short roses are not to be had for all the orders, and those who are able to connect with any little lot are required to pay well for them. Medium stems also are short of the demand, but the higher priced grades can still be supplied, the prices for the best roses, indeed, not having advanced in proportion to the advance in the price of the short roses. Most of those interested say it will be a month before all grades of roses again are plentiful, but a few say that a week of mild and fairly bright weather will relieve the situation. Beauties continue fairly plentiful for the present.

In direct contrast to the rose situation, cattleyas are overabundant and have sold at low prices in hundred lots. Valley also has been easier. Bulbous stock has come in much more freely during the last week, and all varieties are plentiful and cheap. White is selling better than colored tulips because of the scarcity of short roses. Paper Whites are slow, and freesia, especially if not of the best, is hard to move.

Sweet peas have begun to arrive in quantity. Some of them are excellent, and they are selling quite well. Violets have fared in the last week not one whit better than in the cold weeks before. Singles have done even worse than doubles. St. Valentine's day is looked forward to as affording a special call for the flower that most needs a boost.

Carnations are arriving in fair quantity and are selling better than they have done, due, probably, to the short supply of roses. The quality varies widely. Some notably fine stock is seen, with much that is poor. White has the call. Red is not wanted.

With cut flowers shortening up there has come an increased call for greens, but no shortage has been found.

Vaughan & Sperry Dissolve.

The partnership between A. L. Vaughan and Frederick Sperry was dissolved January 20, to take effect February 1, Mr. Vaughan acquiring Mr. Sperry's interest on that date. He will continue the business, probably under the name of A. L. Vaughan & Co.

Mr. Sperry left for a trip to California the same day the partnership was dissolved.

The Oldest Florist.

In a recent issue of The Review comment was made on the many years' service in the trade of so young a man as Harry Manheim, who, though only 35 years of age, says he has been twenty-eight years in the trade. The note brought the following interesting letter from J. B. Weeks:

I read that Harry Manheim, now with Hoerber Bros., believes himself to be the youngest old florist in Chicago. It may be of interest to some of The Review's readers, many of whom I know, that in the year 1862 Edgar Sanders opened a store at 107 Lake street for the sale of plants, cut flowers, seeds, etc., it being the only store in the city for such a business at that time. I became the manager of the store at the time it was opened and continued with Mr. Sanders for many years. I am old now, being in the eightieth year of my life.

Mr. Weeks resides at 4041 Milton place, Irving Park, and still supplies some of his old patrons with shrubs, herbaceous plants, bedding stock, etc.

Various Notes.

The violet train broke the record January 19. The Rhinebeck stock comes on a Michigan Central train due at 8:45 p. m., but which seldom is on time. During the cold weather it has been hours late and the shipment due to arrive on the evening of January 19 did not get in until noon January 20. But no one went without violets Saturday morning on that account.

W. L. Palinsky has made a claim on the Peoples Gas Light and Coke Co. for slightly more than $1,300 damages from the seepage of gas reported in this column last week. On receipt of the claim the gas company asked C. Frauenfelder to look over Mr. Palinsky's place and, not to be behind with expert evidence, Mr. Palinsky had E. Wienhoeber and H. N. Bruns take note of the damage.

William Winterson and Mrs. Winterson will celebrate their golden wedding anniversary Sunday, January 28. They are the parents of Edgar F. and Lewis H. Winterson and the latter has written a poem as a feature of the doings at the home of the venerable couple on North Oakley avenue.

Herman Schultz, who has been gardener at Waldheim cemetery for over a quarter of a century, has started in business for himself. He has bought the Washington Boulevard Greenhouses, at Oak Park. C. Pfund was the former proprietor. Mr. Schultz sold his residence in Forest Park.

Wendland & Keimel have glazed seven of their new houses and have five men working on the eighth, with three more houses ready for the glass. The severe weather has delayed the work, but it is expected all the houses will be ready for planting March 1.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The market has shown decided improvement for the week ending January 24. The weather has moderated. The supply is hardly so heavy. The demand has improved. Prices are firmer That is the situation in brief. Roses are rather less plentiful. There is nothing approaching a shortage except in the cheaper grades. Carnations are more plentiful. Prices rule lower. At these lower figures a better demand has developed. Good sweet peas are in active request at excellent figures. Most of the flowers are now of medium and lower grades, selling at from one-half to one-third the price of the best stock. Cattleyas, gardenias and violets are rather quiet, with the supply fully equal to the demand. There is a marked increase in the receipts of bulbous flowers. Single daffodils and freesia both are fine. They are used in large numbers. Tulips generally are poor. Many of the bulbs do not appear to have been well ripened and do not produce good flowers and stems so early. Paper White narcissi are cheap. Lilies are selling better. Valley always seems in favor when well done. Greens are in brisk demand.

The out-of-town demand is lively, calling for much fine stock. The pre-Lenten social season of entertainments is in full swing everywhere.

A Pretty Novelty.

"I have something to show you. Here are two hat baskets; one is made up ready for a 6-inch pot; the other can be made up with this adjustable wire any size desired." The speaker was H. Bayersdorfer. Before him were two attractive braid hat baskets, one ready for use, with a light handle; the other flat, awaiting adjustment. Mr. Bayersdorfer said they came in flower colors and were a novelty that would prove invaluable.

As many letters have postscripts, so with this novelty comes another—a French, or may be it was termed Parisian sprinkler, an ingenious device by which a steady spray is pumped, as it were, from a bottle. This ingenious device is intended to supplement the rubber sprinkler now in use in the shops. It was instantly adopted by several of our leading florists.

SPRING FLOWERS

Single Daffodils are very fine, in large or small quantities.
Violets, single and double, are choice.
Freesia, with long stems.
Paper Whites are very good value for decorations.
Valley, in two grades.

We have an excellent supply of ROSES, CARNATIONS, EASTER LILIES and all seasonable flowers.

PRINCETON

We are receiving large shipments of this fine rose daily. In color it is the brightest and best of the pinks. Princeton won high honors at Detroit at the American Rose Society Exhibition.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The cold wave has departed, leaving a record of the worst January business New York has ever known. The regular winter temperature seems to have returned and, with no superabundance of arrivals in roses or other cut flowers, there should be satisfactory business during the balance of the season, or at least until Lent arrives. McKinley day should exert its influence, and reminders of it are already in all the wholesalers' windows.

Shipments of all kinds were light last week, but prices did not advance, although Beauties were especially firm and 75 cents was the asking price for the selected ones at the end of the week. There has been no change in the values of other roses. Killarney still leads the procession. The new roses lose none of their attractiveness and popularity. Carnations were disappointing to the wholesale distributors and any lift to values seemed a hopeless task. Few sold above 3 cents, even of the novelties. Lilies were firmer, valley abundant and orchids about sufficient for the demand. There are more callas arriving and a better grade, some selling up to $2 a dozen. Gardenias do not go above $4 a dozen for the best. A lot of second-class stock is arriving that the street venders and the department stores must take. There is a great abundance of bulbous stock. Daffodils are no longer limited and of freesia there is no end. Tulips are improving. All the other seasonable stock is in liberal supply.

The cold interfered with the violet demand, but prices held at 60 cents for the best. There was no outlet for the lower grades. This week should see an increased demand. St. Valentine's day and the privileges of leap year should make February an especially good month.

Various Notes.

The Elberon Horticultural Society held its annual banquet at Deal Inn January 22 and the Morris County Horticultural Society had its dinner at Piper's hotel, Morristown, January 24. Glen Cove's date is January 25 and Yonkers will celebrate St. Valentine's day. New York always is represented at each of these pleasant affairs.

The New York and New Jersey Association of Plant Growers will have its annual banquet this year at Mouquin's, Twenty-eighth street and Sixth avenue. Julius Roehrs, Jr., H. C. Steinhoff and Louis Dupuy are the committee.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia, of Ottawa, Canada, are here this week and some notable dinners are to be given. Lang has charge of the decorations for Ambassador Reid. Orchids will be the principal flower.

The Caldy-Waldy beefsteak dinner Saturday evening, January 20, under the management of Charles Millang, was a great success. About 125 sat down in Castle Cave to a splendid repast at which champagne flowed freely. Nearly every wholesale florist was present or represented. A fine musical program was rendered by professionals and the festivities lasted until Sunday morning.

LANCASTER, PA.

The Lancaster Florists' Club held a meeting on Thursday evening, January 18, in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce. President Albert M. Herr gave an interesting talk about his recent trip to Detroit, where he attended the annual exhibition of the American Carnation Society.

A number of new varieties of carnations were on exhibition. H. D. Rohrer exhibited a vase of a new red seedling; E. J. Weaver, of Ronks, a vase of a new red, named Comfort, and J. W. Bruckart, of Lititz, a vase of new seedling carnations. H. D. Rohrer also exhibited a specimen of the new Primula malacoides, which was greatly admired. There was an exhibit of Rainbow from the Wanoka Greenhouses, Barneveld, N. Y.; of Delhi from William Murphy, Cincinnati, and of Rosette from F. Dorner & Sons Co., La Fayette.

The program for the next meeting is in the hands of B. F. Barr, W. B. Girvin and Francis Bachler.

The Market.

The market last week was somewhat better, and retailers also say there was quite an improvement in business over the week previous. The uptown florists say there was quite a demand for decorative work for social events, which they expect will be plentiful from now till Lent.

The wholesalers last week reported roses a trifle scarce; although there are a lot coming in, they are cleaning up early on them. The market was also somewhat shy on carnations, but the growers say there is a big crop coming and all they need is a few more bright, springlike days, similar to the last few. The clear days also brought in a large cut of California violets, which sold well, and a large supply is expected from the Kirkwood growers this week.

Lilies, both longiflorum and auratum, are plentiful and the quality is fine. There is also plenty of extra good valley coming in; in fact, it was a little overabundant last week. Some good tulips, jonquils, Von Sions, Paper Whites and Romans helped to swell the market with seasonable stock. There was also a large demand for bronze galax and fancy ferns.

Various Notes.

The W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co. is mailing its complete new catalogue to the trade. This firm had a big run on California violets last week.

Carl Beyer is still confined to his bed with rheumatism. He says that he feels all right, but can not carry any weight on his feet. He hopes, however, to be out again soon.

The Retail Florists' Association has changed the meeting night to the third Monday in each month. The annual election of officers was held at the meeting January 15, and resulted as follows: President, C. C. Sanders; vice-

ROCHESTER.

The Market.

With a rise in temperature, business has also risen to a brisker pace. The week began with a rush for the retailers, which still keeps up. A large percentage of the business done was funeral work, for an unusual number of deaths have occurred in the last few weeks. Luncheons and dinners are numerous, making a great demand for cut flowers. Shipments were damaged considerably by the cold.

Carnations are arriving in great quantities and are much reduced in price. Pink Delight is the best seller just now. It is also best in quality and seems to put Pink Enchantress in the background for popularity. Orchids are abundant and go for almost any price, to be used in funeral work, baskets, bunches and corsages. Several boxes of orchids were somewhat nipped by the frost when they arrived. Cypripediums are coming more and more into favor with our flower buyers, but they are not plentiful at present. Beauties are poor and scarce, most of our supply coming from Philadelphia. Good lilacs and sweet peas are also arriving from that market.

Tulips, daffodils and narcissi have been used most profusely for decorations of all sorts during the last few weeks, since the trade has tired of winter flowers. Freesia is still scarce. Lavender primrose sprays are used a great deal with daffodils and yellow tulips and make a charming combination of lavender and yellow for luncheon and dinner tables. Tulips, in white, pink, red and yellow, are combined with lily of the valley in pots and are much in demand. Fancy plant baskets are not selling well, since there are so many azaleas, primroses, camellias, cyclamens and bulbs offered for sale.

The cold weather has kept the street fakers out of sight, and consequently sales have been larger and prices better.

PROVIDENCE.

The Market.

Opening with weather so cold that few persons ventured out unless they had to, with fewer social functions on the cards than usual, and with alternating rain and icy weather for the later days, last week was one to try the stamina of even the most optimistic. There was some business among the florists, but far from what it should have been. Funeral work was about all that moved, although some social work was on hand and one or two large decorations were reported. The big automobile show this week, however, is expected to have a tendency to improve matters. Prices range normal and the supply is good.

Florists' Club Banquet.

The sixteenth annual banquet of the Florists' and Gardeners' Club of Rhode Island was held at 96 Westminster street, January 15, the event proving one of the most enjoyable that the organization has had. Nearly 100 members and guests were present and the program included the induction of officers for the ensuing year, together with speeches by members prominent in the horticultural profession and a pleasing entertainment.

The retiring president, Robert Johnston, presided at the opening festivities and presented William E. Chappell, secretary of the club, as toastmaster of the evening. William J. Stewart, of Boston; Prof. Herbert J. Wheeler and Prof. George E. Adams, both of the Rhode Island State College at Kingston, were the principal speakers.

In accepting the post of toastmaster Mr. Chappell replied to President Johnston's introduction by presenting to him a silver-mounted silk umbrella, stating that the committee had wisely

JANESVILLE, WIS.

It seems that when any city is endeavoring to do something really worth while, some of that city's florists are generally among the most active in seeing that the undertaking is made a success. Edward Amerpohl, proprietor of the Janesville Floral Co., was superintendent and treasurer of the annual poultry show, recently held here by the Southern Wisconsin Poultry Association, and there was every indication that the show was successful. Mr. Amerpohl says that he has no fault to find with business. A. F. L.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The thirteenth was far from an unlucky number for the Tarrytown Horticultural Society's annual banquet January 17, at the Florence Inn. George Whittinger now is president of the society, Thos. A. Lee vice-president, Chas. Weeks treasurer, and E. W. Newbrand, to whom much of the success of the banquet is due, the perennial secretary. The attendance was seventy-five and included many of Tarrytown's prominent men. The decorations were artistic and Messrs. Pierson, Scott Bros., Roberts and Whittinger donated handsome ferns, Killarneys, Wodenethe and Eccles carnations and freesia and begonias.

Frank R. Pierson enjoyed his first experience as toastmaster. Several letters of regret were read, including those from Patrick O'Mara, W. J. Stewart and John Young. A local quartet and T. B. Allen, Jr., gave a fine musical program, and Will McDonald, of Yonkers, sang finely, as usual. Sister societies were well represented. Oscar Addor, of the Westchester and Fairfield, Frank Drews and M. C. Ebel, from Morris county, John Dinkel and J. H. Everett, of Nassau county, Miller, of Dutchess county, and Howard Nichols and Will McDonald, of Yonkers, were there. Mr. O'Dell spoke for the local press and Mr. Sperry for the horticultural press. Mr. Shaw talked about "The Land of the Lily and the Rose." Clarence Davidson spoke for the ladies, Isaac Smith, of Peekskill, for "The Family Tree," and Mr. Griffin on "Farming." Judge Millard talked on various topics. Everybody says it was the best banquet in the society's history. J. A. S.

SEFTON FLORISTS' BOXES

CORRUGATED DESIGN STYLE AND FOLDING CUT FLOWER BOXES

Florists' success in shipping flowers depends to the greatest extent upon the point where their interest ceases in the sale of flowers. Particular Florists are users of Sefton Corrugated Fibreboard Boxes for the shipment of Floral Designs as well as our superior line of Folding Cut Flower Boxes. They know from experience that Sefton Boxes combine high quality with low price and make neat, attractive packages which carry the flowers safely to destination. Write for our Flower Box Price List.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago; First Vice-Pres., M. H. Duryea, New York City; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.
Thirtieth annual convention, Chicago, June 25 to 27, 1912.

THE death of William Deal, the well known English seedsman, is reported in this week's obituary column.

WM. F. LANGE has opened a seed store at 805 Meade street, Appleton, Wis., where he will specialize in garden and flower seeds.

CRAVER DICKSON SEED CO. is the name of a new $100,000 corporation, which filed its papers at Buffalo, N. Y., December 30, 1911.

THE North Wisconsin Seed Co., of Eau Claire, has been incorporated, with $15,000 capital. The incorporators are T. B. Keith, A. J. Keith and Ben F. Faast.

ON the whole the retail catalogues are priced pretty much on a level, but on a few items there is such wide variation, especially on carrot, that it can hardly fail to be noted by seed planters.

ARNOLD RINGIER, secretary of the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, who started, shortly after the opening of the year, on one of his periodical swings around the western circuit, has been laid up at St. Paul by an attack of rheumatism.

RALPH M. WARD & Co., New York, were one of thousands of firms that had safe deposit boxes in the burned Equitable building. Although it was considered certain that the immensely valuable contents of the boxes had escaped damage, the box-renters had not at last accounts gained access to their boxes.

THE Aggeler & Musser Seed Co., Los Angeles, states that, while the dry weather has undoubtedly checked sales, they are well satisfied with the showing made this season so far, business being well in advance of any previous year. This seems to be about the position of other seedsmen in southern California, but all agree that rain is badly needed.

THE January mail orders have not thus far come up to expectations, due, without doubt, to the exceptionally long continued severely cold weather with which the year opened. Mail order seed houses have become accustomed to having all they can do from the middle of February to the middle of April, and to looking to the first six weeks of the year as the time in which an increase in business is to be made; hence the early mailing of catalogues now in vogue. A falling off from last January's sales will be difficult to pick up.

AT a business session following the annual banquet of the Minnesota Field Crop Breeders' Association at St. Paul, January 10, resolutions were adopted favoring legislation requiring all seeds offered for sale in Minnesota to be analyzed and the percentage of pure seed and of weed seed to be stamped on each lot sold. The association commended Oscar Hauge for his efforts in behalf of a pure seed law, and recommended the appointment of a committee of three members to confer with Mr. Hauge in obtaining the passage of such a law.

LOSS TO DANISH AGRICULTURE.

Loechner & Co., who are American representatives of Hjalmar Hartmann & Co., Danish seed growers, report the death of M. L. Mortensen, M. A., the young councilor for cultivation of plants, at his home in Lyngby. "Modern Danish agricultural science," the firm says, "has lost one of its best workers by this young man's death.

M. L. Mortensen.

In spite of his youth—Mr. Mortensen was only about 30 years old—his work had attracted the greatest attention and he was looked upon with the highest expectations. At his death he was councilor at the plant pathological experimental department of the Coöperating Danish Agricultural Societies and during recent times he had especially occupied himself with certain diseases in cereals, caused by attacks of mucous fungus. On this topic he gave a lecture about a year ago, in the Agricultural Society, which created the greatest sensation."

MILD WINTER IN HOLLAND.

The Horticultural Trade Journal (English) had, in its issue of January 3, the following from its correspondent in the Holland bulb fields:

"When the old year changes for a new one, the bulb grower likes to see his fields covered up by snow, as the most natural and most desirable of all frost protections. Not so, however, this time, and it appears as if the summer record of extreme heat is also going to be followed by a record abnormal winter, and there is no saying what consequences this may lead to. As it is, many growers have been compelled to remove part of the winter covering, and the first week in January is likely to see a wholesale removal of all winter coverings in all the bulb growing districts, unless a change of weather should soon set in. This mild weather enables the growers to push the outside work with all vigor, and thus hundreds of hands are being employed that would have to be idle in case the grounds were frozen up."

WINTER-BLOOMING SWEET PEAS.

Will sweet pea seed grown in California, in the open, flower as prolificly as seed grown under glass? I have heard complaint this winter that sweet peas are not blooming so well as in other years and certainly mine are not. Seed sown September 15 in pots and planted in solid beds had not showed bloom January 1. Of course I refer to the winter-flowering type of sweet pea, which has come into such wide demand among florists. The question is whether growing the seed in California will not change the nature of the plant and cause the trouble we have had this winter? This is a most important point and will have to be thoroughly understood if we are to avoid disappointment in the future.—C. E. Y.

Space gladly will be given for any letters throwing light on the question raised.—Ed.

EUROPEAN SEED NOTES.

Dobbie & Co., seed merchants, Edinburgh, one of the largest mail-order firms in Great Britain, have this season issued 105,000 catalogues of 208 pages each. Sweet peas adorn the cover. In 1911 their business increased nearly twenty per cent. Ryder & Co., St. Albans, another large mail-order seed house, commenced the new year in extensive, finely equipped new premises.

Robert Inch and Andrew Riddell, at one time in partnership as seed merchants in Edinburgh, but later engaged in business separately, died within two days of each other, in the closing week of 1911. Both were well known and highly respected members of the Edinburgh seed trade.

SEED TIME AND HARVEST.

The Department of Agriculture has issued the first of a series of bulletins dealing with exhaustive investigations made with regard to seed planting and harvest dates for the principal crops throughout the United States. The data will no doubt well repay careful study by seedsmen.

"Because southern latitudes are first to feel the advance of spring," says the bulletin, "it is quite natural to suppose that planting and harvesting always move northward with its advance. As a general fact, the progress of sowing and harvesting is northward, but there are interesting exceptions. Of cereals sown in the spring sowing and harvesting always move in a northward direction, while of those sown in late summer or fall the sowing movement is always southward. Harvesting progresses northward in the case of all cereals except buckwheat. Corn planting progresses northward; winter wheat sowing moves southward. The harvesting of corn and of winter wheat progress northward, but the sowing and harvesting of buckwheat progress southward.

"It should be remembered that there are many causes which influence the times of sowing and harvesting and, while a line connecting places which sow or harvest simultaneously will run in the main from east to west, there are curious irregularities, deviations here and there, depending primarily upon altitude, rainfall and character of soil. An increase in altitude is analogous to an increase of latitude, and therefore when these lines cross the higher altitudes they will naturally bend toward the south. In regions of great annual rainfall the line will also bend southward, due to physiological peculiarities of plant growth. While the waters of the Great Lakes undoubtedly mitigate the severity of the continental climate in that vicinity, yet they also delay seasonal changes and thus retard spring growth and hence cause a later harvest. This explains why the lines in the vicinity of the Great Lakes are bent southward." An interesting map illustrates the points made.

Relative to the rate of progress of corn planting the bulletin says: "At the starting point, near Brownsville, Tex., planting begins on the average date of February 10. The movement reaches the Texas-Oklahoma line on the mean date of March 12, and therefore crosses Texas in thirty days, or at the rate of eighteen miles per day.

"From the time this movement starts at the Texas-Oklahoma line until it reaches the Oklahoma-Kansas line twenty-five days elapse. The distance from one state line to the other is about 220 miles. Planting, therefore, moves northward through Oklahoma at the rate of nine miles a day. The rate of progress through Kansas is ten miles; through Nebraska, nineteen miles; through South Dakota, fifty miles, and through North Dakota, forty-four miles per day.''

The soil temperature at which corn germinates has been ascertained by numerous tests in field and laboratory. The air temperature at which corn planting takes place in actual practice, however, has not heretofore been established, but from data assembled in this bulletin it is believed to be approximately 55 degrees. Air temperature records at corn planting time in the vicinity of 127 cities east of the Rocky Mountains are given in tabular form.

THE SEED SHORTAGE.

Seedsmen all over the world have been talking of the short seed crops for so long that it is an old story, yet crop talk always is news, no matter how well the facts may be understood, and is read with interest. The following is from a trade letter sent out by Watkins & Simpson, London:

''We should like to give our customers a few facts concerning the abnormal season from which we have all suffered, on account of the continued drought and scorching sun of last spring and summer. Although everybody has been more or less affected by the lack of moisture and excessive heat, we doubt if many have yet realized the universal shortage of the seed crops over the whole of Europe and America, with perhaps the exception of Denmark. This is the third season in succession of short seed crops over practically the whole of the world, and as a result the stocks of seeds on hand today are the smallest the trade has ever known. It has been impossible to estimate the yields of our crops. We have expected little, but we are realizing much less after harvesting. It has been, and is, a most disappointing and

Vegetable Forcing.

WITH NEW ORLEANS TRUCKERS.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Orleans Gardeners' Mutual Protective Association was held in its hall, 114 Exchange Place, January 14. The following officers were elected: C. R. Panter, president; W. Orth, vice-president; John Parr, secretary; John Bollinger, grand guardian; Isidore Mayer, treasurer; Joseph Faust, grand marshal. Following the initiation, the various annual reports were read. That of the treasurer showed that the association had over $3,000 in bank.

After the adjournment the members repaired to the Old Hickory, where an elaborate banquet was served. Charles Panter acted as toastmaster. His reelection marks his third term of service. Since 1884 he has been actively engaged in horticultural and agricultural work in the state. He is the past president of the New Orleans Horticultural Society, and has always been connected with the different flower shows of this city. In the Order of Druids he is past supreme arch and colonel of the Uniform Rank. He is also prominently connected with many other fraternal orders.

During the course of the addresses at the banquet it was stated by several of the largest truck growers of the state that the vegetable crop was practically destroyed by the recent freeze.

CYANIDE ON VEGETABLES.

In The Review of December 14, page 42, I noticed a letter from A. L. Merrill, relating his troubles in the use of hydrocyanic acid gas, with a reply from C. W., and I thought that my experience might perhaps be of use to some of the readers. In my experiments here, in England, I have found that greenhouse vegetables are easily affected by the gas, as C. W. says they are. Yet, though I am not recommending the gas in a general way for vegetables, I have used it successfully on tomatoes and cucumbers for white fly. This fly, though one of the hardest pests to exterminate with nicotine fumigants, seems to be quite susceptible to the gas. One ounce of cyanide of potassium (ninety-eight per cent pure, granular) to 2,500 cubic feet, in a fairly tight house, is sufficient to kill the adult flies, but not the eggs. A second and perhaps a third dose, at intervals of five days, will generally clean them out.

The atmosphere must be dry and great care must be taken that there is no moisture on the leaves. If these soft, quick-growing plants are slightly dry at the root, the danger of burning is greatly reduced. Besides this premature early, yield heavily and keep well. An ideal soil and climate give them true color, correct shape and good size. Many years of critical selection have firmly fixed all these desirable traits in our strains. One of our customers, while ordering 250 lbs. of Ohio Yellow Globe Onion seeds, writes on Dec. 14, 1911, as follows: "It may interest you to know that among over 10,000 bu. of onions raised from your seeds we had absolutely no white onions."

caution as to dryness, care must be taken not to have the temperature too high and only pure chemicals must be used; these, I believe, are the chief points to be observed in preventing disaster. Syringe the plants before the sun reaches them in the morning. I have never used more than three ounces in one jar on growing crops, but more jars per house.

Have any of The Review's readers tried cyanide of sodium instead of potassium? I have seen it recommended largely in England, as being safer and cheaper, and I understand that only half the strength is necessary.

THE REVIEW sends Scott's Florists' Manual postpaid for $5.

In this world nothing absolutely sure exists, except, perhaps, taxes and death; therefore we are all, in a small degree, a pack of gamblers. The question is, how much of a chance should we take? Wise men always minimize chance as much as possible. The professional gambler always loses, eventually. The keeper of a gambling house never gambles—he knows too much, for if he did he would not long be the keeper. It's the fuzzle-headed jiggers who do the gambling—the easy-marks—those who cannot withstand temptation. In lily bulbs there is always a more or less degree of gambling by the very nature of the business. It's an everlasting fight against the eternal cussedness of things. But the chance can be minimized materially if growers would buy Horseshoe Brand bulbs to begin with. There are none better produced and there may be many worse. One dose of bad Lily bulbs in a period of five years will be a greater loss to the grower than the extra cost of the best bulbs, to say nothing of the loss and disappointment in a business way. Buy Horseshoe Brand Lily bulbs—they are the safest all-around bulbs there are.

PACIFIC COAST.

Subscribers on the Pacific coast should not fail to note that their special department of The Review has grown until it now occupies four pages. Give us a boost and the Pacific Coast Department will keep right on growing.

Seattle, Wash.—Rosaia Bros. are planning to put up four new greenhouses, each 28x200.

Aptos, Cal.—Peter Hauer has a fine lot of yearling apple trees in his nursery in Pleasant Valley.

Centralia, Wash.—For the first time in the history of this town a florist's delivery wagon has been seen on the streets. It belongs to C. D. Doncaster, of the Floral View Greenhouses.

Santa Cruz, Cal.—W. E. King was married January 11. Theo. A. Butterworth has secured a large vacant space on the main business street and is filling it with nursery stock for sale. J. P. Parker cut a good crop of orchids for the holidays, including one spike of cattleya with eleven flowers.

Orenco, Ore.—Fifty residents of this town and employees of the Oregon Nursery Co. have organized a club for the study of horticulture. John A. McGee was elected president and Roy A. McDowell secretary. At the first meeting an address on a horticultural theme was delivered by Frank W. Power, secretary of the Oregon State Horticultural Society.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.

The San Diego Floral Co. opened a store January 1, at 1014 Fifth street.

Winter trade is increasing so rapidly that first-class stock is at a premium.

Lanier Bros. report that their trade since opening at 1321 C street December 1 has far exceeded what they expected. K.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

With the passing of the cold and snowy weather, business has taken a decided change for the better, and the death of several of the city's prominent people increased demand for funeral work. Flowers of all varieties are plentiful, carnations being the best sellers for all occasions. Roses also are in heavy crop; White Killarney especially is doing itself justice this season.

Spring flowers are in greater variety and always move well. Indications point to an early spring.

Various Notes.

A. H. Hammer, formerly of Smyth's, Chicago, is visiting friends in this city. He is a recent graduate of Northwestern College of Medicine and expects to remain in Portland to practice his profession.

J. J. Karins, of Philadelphia, and James Forbes crossed sticks in a pool tournament of thirty-six games a few days ago; result, Karins 520, Forbes 472. This is an annual event and, needless to say, the game was played strictly on its merits; the attention of Messrs. Ringier and Fotheringham is called to this fact.

E. W. McLellan, of San Francisco, is in town to look over the market conditions. E. R. C.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Market.

The weather has turned mild again and we are getting a taste of spring somewhat in advance of the scheduled time. Rain is not up to the required quantity, and unless we have a downpour soon, the season of 1911-1912 will do down in history as a "dry year." While this does not affect the retailers as directly as it does those more interested in the plant trade, it gives a general feeling of danger to everyone that is daily evidenced in decreased sales along all lines.

Flowers are becoming cheaper and of slightly better quality as the time progresses, and, with the influx of considerable lots of outside bulbous stock, it will be but a short while until the store windows assume their springtime appearance. Roses show the largest gain in quality and quantity, and we can look for plenty of fancy cuts from this time onward for several months. Carnations, although slightly higher than they were one year ago, are also showing a tendency to drop in price. Valley has been well used up for several weeks, and the same can be said of all kinds of white stock. Funeral orders have been brisk at most of the stores, and these, together with a fair number of wedding decorations, have brought the first weeks of the new year up to the standard. Mums are practically over and we shall see no more of them until next fall. Violets are in their prime and are used in enormous quantities by all the stores as well as by the street vendors.

Other lines of stock show no material change except a general tendency to larger quantities and a downward tendency in price.

Various Notes.

Two new stores have made their appearance in town. The Schwartzwald Co. has opened on Devisadero street near Page street, and the Violet Floral Co. has started in the retail trade on Devisadero street near the corner of McAllister street.

The Pacific Orchid Co., of Alameda, is cutting heavily of cattleyas at this time. This company will erect two new houses, each 25x75 feet, during the coming spring.

Thomas Domoto, of Domoto Bros., Elmhurst, was held up and robbed by three men on the evening of January 13, within a block of his nursery. He was

WHERE IT ALWAYS IS SUMMER.

The average florist would not look with favor upon a suggestion that it be summer all the year around, but at San Diego, in far southern California, it never is winter and still the florists do a fine business. A San Diego store is shown in the accompanying illustration, which is made from a photograph of the new home of Lanier Bros., opened December 1, at 1321 C street. The view is from the street, through the show window. The store is in charge of Van M. Zimmerman, who has had several years of experience with the Chicago retailers.

PASADENA, CAL.

The Market.

Business has been quiet since the holidays, but a better tone has been noted during the last few days. Retailers say the orders in advance are good, but nurserymen and seedsmen say the dry weather has, in some measure, checked business.

Various Notes.

The Park Hill Floral Co. has opened a retail stand at 24 East Colorado street.

The Orchid, the store at 13 East Colorado street, is living up to its name. On the day I called, Mr. Jaeger had an order for a luncheon party in which 100 cattleyas were used for table decoration, and both he and his partner, L. F. Wolfskill, have been kept busy. A fine line of stock is carried here, especially in roses.

Miss F. M. Hudson is now well established in her new store at the Business Arcade, annexed to Hotel Green, and says she is well satisfied with the change.

Stock is in fine order at Thomas Chisholm's place. Mr. Chisholm will erect more glass this season.

WHERE IT ALWAYS IS SUMMER.

The average florist would not look with favor upon a suggestion that it be summer all the year around, but at San Diego, in far southern California, it never is winter and still the florists do a fine business. A San Diego store is shown in the accompanying illustration, which is made from a photograph of the new home of Lanier Bros., opened December 1, at 1321 C street. The view is from the street, through the show window. The store is in charge of Van M. Zimmerman, who has had several years of experience with the Chicago retailers.

PASADENA, CAL.

The Market.

Business has been quiet since the holidays, but a better tone has been noted during the last few days. Retailers say the orders in advance are good, but nurserymen and seedsmen say the dry weather has, in some measure, checked business.

Various Notes.

The Park Hill Floral Co. has opened a retail stand at 24 East Colorado street.

The Orchid, the store at 13 East Colorado street, is living up to its name. On the day I called, Mr. Jaeger had an order for a luncheon party in which 100 cattleyas were used for table decoration, and both he and his partner, L. F. Wolfskill, have been kept busy. A fine line of stock is carried here, especially in roses.

Miss F. M. Hudson is now well established in her new store at the Business Arcade, annexed to Hotel Green, and says she is well satisfied with the change.

Stock is in fine order at Thomas Chisholm's place. Mr. Chisholm will erect more glass this season.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The Market.

Continued dry weather prevails, but by consistent irrigation the outdoor flowers keep up a good display. Sweet peas are greatly improved in quality and the pinks and mauves are now good, though short in stem. Whites are not quite so good, but their place is taken to some extent by a fine variety of stocks. The purple stocks are also showy and clear in color. Violets are plentiful and there are also plenty of centaureas in various colors. The new white marguerite, Mrs. F. Sander, has made its appearance from outdoor plants and is useful for filling in the best class of funeral work. There is a bright future before this pretty flower, as it thrives so well outside and is in bloom practically all the year around. Carnations are also good and the demand keeps up well.

In bulbous stock there are still plenty of Paper White narcissi, while the Chinese and other varieties are now plentiful. There are days when everything sells out and prices mount a little, but as a rule there is plenty for all.

Of indoor stock, roses are now about equal to the demand and some of the finest Bridesmaid seen for years are shipped here from San Francisco. The growers at the northern city help us out with indoor roses, orchids and valley, while outdoor stock of good quality is shipped from us to them. Cattleyas are not of the best quality just now, but there are plenty of them, both local and from the north. There is a spirited demand for the best greens, especially smilax in long strings, and the supply is about equal to it.

Various Notes.

Walter Armacost & Co., of Ocean Park, are erecting two greenhouses at their place at Sawtelle. Mr. Armacost reports business good at the retail store in the Auditorium building.

Mrs. D. T. McDonald has bought out the business of the Pacific Nursery, at 3400 Central avenue, which was carried on for years by the Mosteller brothers.

Louis Truxler, of the University Nursery, has returned from a three weeks' trip to old Mexico.

Business is keeping up well at the Los Angeles Flower Market. Carnations, good roses and bulbous stock are the principal offerings in flowers, and greens are going well.

H. N. Gage Co. is showing magnificent stocks. The whites are pure and the purples clear and of fine substance. Both stocks and good smilax strings are being shipped by this firm to San Francisco. Primo, a pretty primrose-colored narcissus, sells well here, too; the odor is not so heavy nor the yellow color so decided as in the Chinese variety, and this makes it better for funeral work.

Dr. J. P. Parker, of Santa Cruz, who grows and ships fine cattleyas to this market, was a welcome visitor this week.

J. Norris & Son, at West Washington street, are showing remarkably fine bays and box trees in every conceivable shape and size. Some of the large bays are especially good.

Wm. A. Grosser, of 1406 Central avenue, is going to remodel his place, removing the old greenhouse at the front and replacing it with a modern structure that will be a great improvement. He will also build another rose house, 36x70 feet, along modern lines. His Richmond and other roses look well. His brother has now joined him in business.

President Payne, of the Los Angeles County Horticultural Society, has named a committee, consisting of A. A. Vermueller, L. Horner, J. J. Reeves, William Hertrich and A. Cook, to confer with the park commission as to the advisability of certain work now being carried on. This relates more especially to the cutting down of palms in Eastlake park. A prominent member of the society has been outspoken with reference to some of the existing abuses, and the work of eastern landscape men with no California experience or knowledge of local conditions has been severely criticised. While not wishing to form hasty conclusions, it certainly would appear that those in charge should think not only twice, but many times, before condemning fine palms that have taken many years to reach their present proportions. One of the greatest attractions in southern California is its subtropical vegetation and this should not be destroyed at the whim of anyone, especially anyone unacquainted with local conditions.

A serious fire occurred at the greenhouses of the Ingleside Floral Co., January 16. Leaking crude oil from the boiler, igniting in the pan below, was the cause. Upwards of $350 damage was done.

Field-grown Ulrich Brunner roses, with stems thirty-six to forty inches long and absolutely perfect flowers, are not seen everywhere in January, but this is the grade that R. W. Saakes, the American Florist, is showing. They are splendid flowers in every particular.

Superb stock is being shown at the Angelus Flower Shop, where among the orchids are magnificent cattleyas and fine spikes of Oncidium tigrinum and Dendrobium superbum. Funeral work has been plentiful here; a pretty casket cover of lily of the valley and white roses was among the recent pieces. W. Wolters has been on a trip to San Francisco.

Wright's Flower Shop had the decorations at the recent Carpenter wedding, using Killarney roses, pink and white, in the house. The bride carried a shower of valley and the bridesmaids had baskets of pink roses. Harry Friend, of this store, gave a party to about a dozen of his friends January 16, which was greatly enjoyed by all.

The Hayward Floral Co. reports excellent business, especially in funeral work.

At The Roserie trade is keeping up splendidly and I was glad to hear that Mrs. Muller was improving in health.

Frank Lichtenberg has his hands full now at the store of Thee Florists. A big wedding decoration at Pasadena and the decorations at the opening of the new club room of the Foresters were among the recent jobs. Mrs. Lichtenberg now helps out at the store.

G. M. Creutz & Co. report city and shipping business good. A fine line of sweet peas is handled here, as well as choice indoor roses.

Jack D'Ortignac says he will open a flower stand in the hall of the Alexandria hotel shortly. H. R., Richards.

VENTURA, CAL.

M. J. Callahan says that he is well pleased with the way orders are coming in for aster seed. Previous to coming to Ventura Mr. Callahan was foreman for the Stuppy Floral Co., St. Joseph, Mo., for three years, and range foreman for the Poehlmann Bros. Co., Morton Grove, Ill., and Peter Reinberg, Chicago. Ventura is an ideal place for growing aster seed, the summers being pleasant and not hot.

SEATTLE, WASH.

The Market.

Carnations are now arriving in larger quantities and in better shape. Roses and bulbous stock are plentiful. Violets are selling freely. Valley is scarce, the supply generally being smaller than the demand. Trade is fairly brisk and the prices of all kinds of stock are fully up to the usual level for this time of year. The weather of the last week has been phenomenally mild; primroses and other spring flowers are blooming outdoors—rather a contrast to eastern weather.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club will visit Tacoma this week. The bowlers are going along and hope to repeat their recent victory.

Risdon & Son are building a propagating house at their plant at Brighton.

BLIGHTED HARRISII BUDS.

I have some Lilium Harrisii now nearly in bloom, but I find now and then a plant on which the buds seem to have blasted. They turned brown and dried up when they were from one-half to one inch in length, and on those plants all of the buds were lost in this way. Other plants are fine and have nice, healthy buds. I grew them all in the same temperature and treated them alike, as far as I know. The plants that bore these blasted buds were healthy in appearance. If the trouble is in the growing, I certainly want to know it. S. E. S.

I have not seen a perfectly clean batch of Lilium Harrisii for many years, and it is doubtful whether anyone grows any considerable number and does not lose a greater or less proportion from disease. Your plants are probably diseased, though even on the diseased ones the foliage may be green. Your treatment has probably been all right. Another possible cause for flower buds turning yellow is moving the plants from a warm to a cold house while the buds are small. For instance, a change from 60 degrees to 45 degrees would probably cause the loss of many buds. More likely, however, the bulbs were at fault and not your treatment of them. C. W.

General discussion.

A CO-OPERATIVE NURSERY.

The Wolverine Coöperative Nursery Co., at Paw Paw, Mich., has completed its fifth year. At the annual meeting January 9 a trade-mark was adopted, to make its products distinctive. The matter of branches and outside growing points was fully described by the manager, who stated that the proposed branch at Traverse City would make a planting of about 100,000 peach trees the coming spring and the usual amount of planting at Dansville, N. Y., except that the standard pear would all be planted at Paw Paw. The demand for apple trees being so heavy in the west has caused a planting of 50,000 apple trees at Dalton, Mo. The grape cutting branch operated at Fredonia will be entirely discontinued and all plantings made at Paw Paw. The currant and gooseberry plant at South Haven will be continued under contract with John Stephen, who has been growing these plants for several seasons.

While there is quite an increase in the outside plantings, the largest increase is in the home planting in Paw Paw, where over 400,000 peach trees, together with a good assortment of apple, pear, cherry, plum, quince, ornamentals and small fruits, form not only the largest but the most complete assortment of nursery stock grown in western Michigan, the manager said.

The financial statement showed an invoice of $22,562.51, with a surplus of $5,380.85 above all liabilities for both stock and accounts. This would figure that the 961 shares which have been issued are now worth $15,990.85, or $15.60 per share. It was voted to declare a ten per cent dividend, payable June 1, 1912. This will make a total of seventy per cent paid in dividends during the five years.

Corfu, N. Y.—The Wm. Scott Co. has gone heavily into bulb growing, and is shipping large quantities both east and west.

HYDRANGEAS FOR EASTER.

We have a batch of pot-grown hydrangeas in a coldframe, nicely ripened. When bringing these in to be forced for Easter, should they be given larger pots, or would doing so retard their blooming? We have a temperature of 50 degrees during January and February; after that, about 60 degrees. How long will it take to get them in bloom under these conditions? On what date shall we bring them in? Also, on what date for Decoration day?

degrees through the balance of January and February. It is a good plan to start at 50 degrees and later raise the temperature. I am afraid, however, you will not be able to flower them by April 7 unless you can give them a brisker heat. With 60 degrees at night you should be able to flower them in ten to eleven weeks.

For Memorial day the plants should be kept as dormant as possible until early in March; then place them in a cool house. After Easter they can be given a little more heat. They are, of course, much better in quality if not grown too warm; 50 degrees at night should land them nicely for Memorial day.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

The Market.

The cold, stormy weather continues and has been a big drawback to business since the first of the year. With the exception of a few days last week when the temperature rose nearly to the freezing point, we have had continuous stormy weather. Many days the glass is so covered with ice and snow that the little sun we have does not penetrate. Stock is short and becoming more so as the month goes on. Carnations were plentiful after the holidays, but are now cleaned up every day, while roses have been scarce all along, and the quality is poor in most cases.

Bulb stock, including trumpets and yellow tulips, is now on the market and goes well at a good price. Paper Whites have never been so plentiful, and with other flowers available they are wasted by the thousand. The top price for this stock is $2 per hundred, but most of it is sold for much less. Lilies are none too plentiful and the demand is quite brisk. Peas, violets and freesia sell well, but as yet the freesia and peas are short-stemmed.

Club Meeting.

Thursday night, January 18, the president of the Buffalo Florists' Club was in the chair for the first time since October. The meeting was arranged to hold a debate and also to enjoy some pictures by Mr. Gillis. The members turned out in good style and the evening was enjoyed by everybody. The debate was: Resolved, that more skill is required in the arrangement and disposal of flowers than in their production. The affirmative was taken by Robert Scott and Mr. Savage, and the negative by Charles Keitsch and Joe Streit. The judges were Charles Sandiford, William Kasting and Mr. Adams. Many points were brought out by both sides and the subject was treated thoroughly. The decision was a tie, the arguments being about evenly balanced. Pictures were then shown on the canvas by Mr. Gillis, and these were most interesting. A vote of thanks was given to Mr. Gillis for his trouble and the pleasure he afforded the members. The customary lunch was served, and it is needless to say that this was enjoyed.

Various Notes.

Miss Hazel Adams, the young lady who was made manager of the R. M. Rebstock Co., has made a good success of the store and gives every promise of keeping the extensive business which Miss Rebstock left when she retired.

A Seedling of S. M. MERWARTH & BRO., Easton, Pa.

Parentage, HARLOWARDEN and ENCHANTRESS

As a medium-priced "red" it has a very promising future

From the Florex Gardens, North Wales, Pa., where this has been grown on trial, we have a letter under date of Nov. 24, 1911, saying: "So far we like the new seedling very much; the color of the flower is fine and the size good. The stems are stiff and the number of blooms to a plant shows it will be a good producer."

E. J. Weaver, of Ronks, Pa., who has been growing five hundred on trial, writes us under date of Jan. 8, 1912: "So far this season this variety has produced more than double the blooms Beacon has, planted in the same house, and I feel sure it will maintain its lead the balance of the season. It is of a much brighter color than Beacon, flower as large, with a good stem, and a calyx that practically does not split, not averaging more than one split flower a week from the five hundred plants."

PITTSBURGH.

The Market.

Continued cold weather was not conducive to good business and there was considerable complaint from the retailers. Funeral work was almost all there was to depend on, except in the case of those who have the decorative end of the business; these had charge of a number of fine social affairs, which called for nice work and used up about all the good stock coming in. The wholesalers did not fare so badly, as stock was not any too plentiful, especially roses of the shorter grades. The trade in violets suffered somewhat, as it has been too cold to wear them on the street and that seems to be one of their principal uses. Paper White narcissi, yellow trumpets and short tulips are coming in quantities, with enough lilies to supply the demand.

Various Notes.

McKinley day is January 29. This is usually a good carnation day and every florist should make an effort to keep up its observance.

David Fraser says we are misinformed regarding the Independent Gardeners' Club and that he has never heard of it and is not its treasurer.

Coal is one of the principal topics among the growers. The Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. used forty-four cars of coal during December.

E. C. Ludwig says he wants all his friends to know he is a candidate for club president and to come and vote for him.

The A. W. Smith Co. has been making a fine window display of Cattleya Trianæ and other orchids.

Ray Dashbach has made a number of advantageous changes since taking his new store and now has a really beautiful shop. His trade is increasing every week. Hoo-Hoo.

The Market.

Owing to the extremely cold weather that prevailed here for a fortnight, stock is rather low, but with the rise in temperature, which occurred a day or two ago, conditions are improving. Prices are moderating and in a few days it is expected there will be plenty of stock. At present, however, the wholesalers' supply is less than the demand. This is especially true of roses and carnations. Lilies are not so scarce. Some spring flowers are coming into the market. These include freesias, white lilac, forsythia, etc.

Various Notes.

The Pennock-Meehan Co. is showing some of the first forget-me-nots, also fine sprays of cœlogyne. Manager McKissick, of this firm, is confined to his home with a bad cold.

Gude Bros. Co. furnished the decorations for the wedding of Miss Culp, daughter of the vice-president of the Southern railway, and Mr. Porter, of Birmingham, Ala., a few days ago, at the Church of the Covenant. Easter lilies and Killarney roses were used, with wild smilax and palms.

Local florists no longer have to burn the midnight oil—literally—in stoves to keep their stores from freezing out. The freezing of Z. D. Blackistone's downtown greenhouse last week resulted in a total loss of all the palms and other plants stored therein, numbering several hundred.

Blackistone's decorations at a recent White House dinner were pronounced by Washington newspapers the finest of their kind ever seen in the President's mansion. Orchids constituted an important feature of the decorations.

The alliterative Freeman's freesias are fine, with extra long stems, but Mrs. Freeman's manager says business is dull.

White and purple rhododendrons and Scotch heather, the first seen here this season, are seen at the store of the Washington Florists Co. The report that this firm will move into the uptown city block where Blackistone, Small and Marche are located is practically confirmed, but the move will not be made for some time.

Henry Pfister, 1120 Connecticut avenue, has a new delivery wagon, resplendent in gold.

W. Marche this week has a big decoration at the Washington Club. A quantity of Radiance roses, lilacs, smilax, and azaleas and palms will be used.

Robert Shoch, of Rice & Co., Philadelphia, is here.

Center Market in part reminds one of a flower show, the following florists having nice stands: Robert Bowdler, John Boyle, Alexander B. Garden, M. J. McCabe, F. H. Kramer, C. Schellhorn, Frank L. Schultz, Frank Slye, G. Milton Thomas and W. J. Springer. H. C. H.

The Market.

Trade has been quite slow for a week or so. Heavy snow and continued cold were the greatest factors in holding business back. This has been the coldest month in about fifteen years and we had a foot of snow, also. Just now it is warmer and the snow almost gone, so better times are expected. The days are noticeably longer and stock will improve from now on.

Various Notes.

Julius Niednagel & Sons had no trouble in keeping the houses warm during the cold snap. The roses and carnations are looking fine. The roses are giving a nice cut and the carnations are full of buds and flowers.

The Wm. Blackman Floral Co. is having its usual good business. They are short of stock and have to buy considerable.

Louis Fritsch had quite a run of funeral work one day last week. His carnations are in excellent condition.

Karl Zeidler gave as a premium a fine sago palm for the smallest dog at our recent poultry show.

Royston & Fenton are off crop and the cut of roses is small. E. L. Fenton won several blue ribbons on his White Wyandottes at the poultry show. Mr. Royston won on his, also.

J. C. Elsperman says that business has been quiet, but seems to be picking up again.

Miss Marion Halbrooks, daughter of Paul Halbrooks, superintendent of the Columbus Floral Co., of Columbus, was here recently on a visit with her grandparents. On her way home she stopped in Louisville and visited several of the leading florists of that city. She takes a great interest in her father's business and is a great help to him. E. L. F.

Three Knocks at Our Door

"Who is there at such a late hour?" remarked our maid. "I have been wandering around for miles to see Mr. Godfrey Aschmann," remarked a fellow florist, looking tired and weary, almost played out, the other day. "I am at the right place, 1012 Ontario street," and knowing Mr. Aschmann, standing right before him, he told him his trouble. "I have been looking for good ferns for my customers for the past week and I have been told to go and see Mr. Aschmann, he making a specialty of ferns. What have you got to offer?" One of our workmen brought a lantern and you ought to have seen how our new visitor was impressed with them, and ordered to be delivered at once, 50 Whitmani, 6-inch, at 50 cents; 25 Boston, 6-inch, at 50 cents; 25 7-inch, at 75 cents; 50 Scottii at 50 cents; 50 Scholzeli, 5½-inch, at 40 cents; 25 6-inch, at 50 cents; 25 7-inch, at 75 cents and, to make the collection complete, 50 8-inch, at $1.00, $1.25 and $1.50. Total, 300 ferns in all.

We have a large stock of Boston, Whitmani, Scholzeli and Scottii, 5½, 6, 7, 8-inch, at 30 cents, 40 cents, 50 cents, 75 cents, $1.00, $1.25 to $1.50. Giatrasii, 4-inch, 20 cents; 5 to 5½-inch, 30 to 40 cents. Good ferns are always in demand, both in winter and spring. Here is your chance to lay in a supply before all are gone. Cash with order, please.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

That the recent cold weather was directly responsible for the slack business was proven, for when warmer weather set in last week business again became more active. The trouble, though, was the scarcity of stock in most lines. Roses and carnations were not up to the demand at any time. Beauties are still scarce. Tulips and trumpet narcissi moved well, while Paper Whites and Romans did not fare so well. Violets again held their own, while the sale for valley was wanting.

Various Notes.

Julius Boelter, of Boelter & Zuehlke, Appleton, Wis., was a mid-week visitor. It might be added that he wore that smile that won't come off, due to the fact that it is now Mr. and Mrs. J. Boelter; Mrs. Boelter was with him.

Charles Menger has become a member of the Milwaukee Florists' Auto Club, having purchased a forty-five horse-power Peerless machine for delivery purposes. He says it was just the thing during the holiday rush, which exceeded that of any previous year.

Though they have done away with Sunday funerals, the force at the store of Currie Bros. Co. say matters are worse than before. Now that the funerals fall on Monday, they are compelled to work Sunday evenings to get out the work which formerly was done on Saturday nights.

The Baumgarten Floral Co. says that since the cold weather has stopped, the firm has been kept busy, mainly with funeral work.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. is the only local wholesale house, at this writing, that is trying to create a demand for carnations for McKinley day, January 29, by displaying neatly printed advertising matter to that effect.

Gust Rusch & Co. complained of a shortage in light colored stock, especially white roses, for funeral work last week.

The Holton & Hunkel Co., which handles the famous Watertown, Wis., violets, reports that sales in that line were quite satisfactory last week.

Greenhouse Heating.

GLAD TO PRINT ANSWERS.

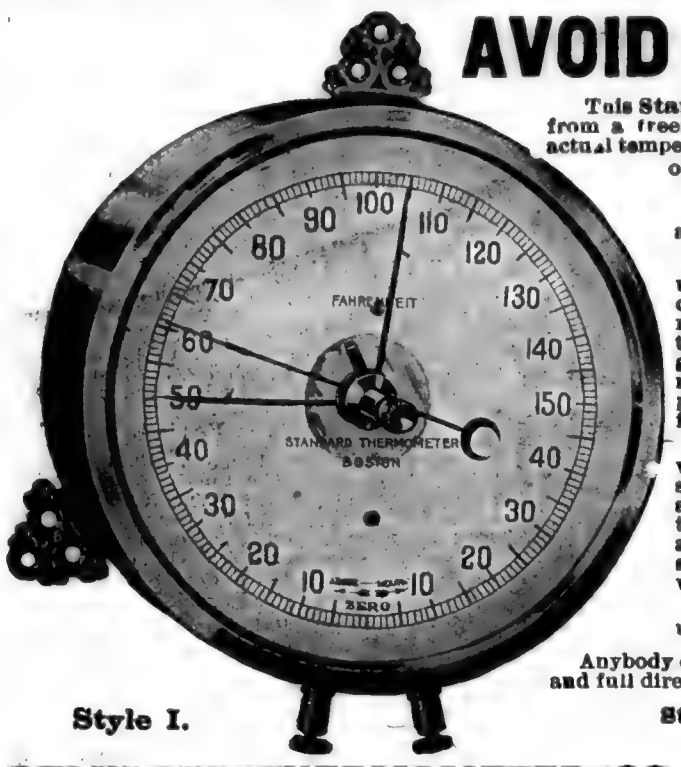
It would be interesting to others, no doubt, as well as myself, to see in the department of Greenhouse Heating statements showing the number of tons of coal used per 1,000 square feet of glass in heating, by a number of representative growers. This should show the kind of fuel used and the temperature maintained. The last two winters I used between nine and ten tons of soft coal screenings (slack), each winter, night temperature averaging 50 degrees. I am inclined to think this too much, and am wondering how it compares with others. I use both hot water and steam, the steam boiler being used only as a helper in extreme weather or when raising heat in the mornings.

L. M. M.

PIPING AND BOILER.

Kindly advise me through your heating department as to the best steam system and how to pipe four houses so I may obtain 65 degrees to 70 degrees in zero weather. The houses are 22x95 feet; height to ridge, fourteen feet; gutters, seven feet; also size of boiler you would recommend. Location, a Chicago suburb. R. F. G.

For each of the houses run a 2-inch overhead main about two feet below the ridge, and at the farther end connect with the coils, using 1¼-inch pipe. Just how many coils there should be will depend upon whether beds or benches are to be used, the number of each, and the use to which the house is to be put. About ten 1¼-inch pipes will be required. If there are four raised benches, two pipes may be located under each of them, and the others on the walls. If there is any exposed glass in any of the walls, use one additional return for every two feet of glass. Shut-off valves should be placed in the connecting pipes at both ends of each coil.



PLANNING AN ADDITION.

Enclosed you will find a rough sketch of my grounds, on which I intend to build some more greenhouses. The present house is 18x50. The boiler shed is at the west end and throws too much shade on the house. Would you advise me to run the new house, 23x120, west from the shed, as shown in the sketch, so that the shed would be at its east end? I should like to keep the boiler shed about where it is, so as to have it as near the dwelling as possible. There is a stable about seventy-five feet north of the shed. Would you advise an equal-span house or one with a short span to the south? I intend to plant the house with carnations and bedding plants. Are there any steam boilers that can be left for any length of time without attention? E. W.

The sketch shows the two houses running east and west, with the shed at the west end of the small house and at the east end of the proposed house, which seems to be as good a plan as can be used, unless the small house is soon to be taken down or extensive additions are to be made in the near future. In either of these cases it would be better to plan for the new house, or houses, without much regard for the present house. A new range could be built running north and south, with a shed at the north end, near the stable referred to. If this is done it will be best to have even-span houses, and they are generally preferred even for houses which run east and west.

While it is always best if steam boilers can have frequent attention, if they are of ample size and have a large

AVOID A FREEZE-UP

This Standard Thermostat will save your stock from a freeze-up. The indicating hand shows the actual temperature at all times. When it reaches either of the other hands it anywhere you please to locate the bell.

J. B. McFarland, of Granger, Wash., writes us as follows:—"I would like to say a word of praise for the thermostat. I have had mine and used it for two years in connection with the orchard heaters. It has always given perfect satisfaction. Although I am not over enthusiastic on the orchard heating proposition, I would not do without the frost alarm for twice the price.

"At this time of the year, when the weather is so uncertain, I place the thermostat in the packing shed. I can go to sleep at night feeling sure that if the weather gets too severe I will be awakened and can go and take measures to protect the fruit in storage; or if a fire should break out I would be aroused."

The Standard Thermostat is just as useful in the greenhouse as in the orchard.

Anybody can put it up—only a screwdriver needed—and full directions with each instrument.

S. WILKS MFG. CO., Chicago. January 13, 1912.

Gentlemen:—

We are having the very best results from the big boiler (30x48 Wilks Heater) now in use on the farm, and I cannot too highly congratulate you on the way it is giving us service, for this morning we have 36 degrees below zero and the "big fellow" just kept the greenhouse standing at 57 degrees from 8 o'clock last night until 6 o'clock this morning without any attention.

Yours very truly,

PIPING A LEAN-TO.

I have a lean-to, 20x20 feet and twelve feet to the ridge, with 3-foot board side walls. The front end is five feet six inches high. All of the sides and the front above the wall are glass. I shall heat this house from an adjoining building, where I can only go three feet at the most below the floor level of the greenhouse. The greenhouse faces south. I shall want a temperature of 60 to 65 degrees in zero weather. What amount of pipe is needed and how should it be distributed? The house has been used as a cold grapery, but I can alter the benches to meet the demands of the heating system. I intend to take the grapevines out, rearrange the benches and put another bench in the place where the grapes are now, making one continuous bench along the south wall. There is a door in the east side of the lean-to, about eight feet from the adjoining building. The boiler is near the northwest corner of the house, but in the basement of the other building. I am located in the southeastern part of New York state. F. C. M.

The door on the east side of the lean-to must be taken into account in arranging the piping. If possible to arrange it in this way, a 2½-inch flow pipe should be carried up vertically from the heater to the height of about ten feet above the floor of the greenhouse. An expansion tank, holding five or more gallons and located several feet above the point where the pipe turns to enter the greenhouse, should be connected by means of a 1-inch pipe. The flow pipe should then be carried into the greenhouse until even with the center of the doorway, when it should turn and run to the east side of the house. There it should divide and a 2½-inch pipe should drop down and connect with a coil of six 2-inch pipes on the south side of the doorway; these pipes should be carried around on the south and west sides of the house to the northwest corner; where they should be connected with the heater by means of a 2½-inch main return pipe. Another 2½-inch flow pipe should drop down on the north side of the door and connect with a coil of five or six 2-inch pipes, which should run around to a point opposite the heater, where they should be connected in the same way as the return from the other coil. If the pipes all run downhill, there will be no occasion for using air valves.

Where There Is Condensation

If, for any reason, the main flow pipe can not be carried up to the height desired until after it has entered the greenhouse, the connection with the expansion tank should still be made at the highest point of the system, and although an elevation of ten feet or more will be desirable, if necessary the tank can be connected directly with the flow pipe.

NOT ENOUGH RADIATION.

I am building a greenhouse, 21x50, running north and south, five feet high to the eaves and eleven feet to the ridge. Please let me know the best way to run the pipes for hot water, to have a temperature of 50 degrees at night. There will be four benches in the house. If I place two 2-inch flows under the ridge, run them to the front, then drop them down and connect with four 1¼-inch returns, which would be under the benches and would enter a 2-inch return to the boiler, would that arrangement be satisfactory? I shall use a Wilks boiler. I am located in western Pennsylvania. H. P. S.

The plan proposed will not supply enough radiating surface, and larger return pipes should be used, unless a circulator is attached to the system. For an open-tank system use one 2½-inch overhead flow pipe and ten 1½-inch returns, and connect the coils to the heater either with one 2½-inch or two 2-inch returns. One of the returns can be on each of the plates and two under each bench. There is no particular objection to the use of two 2-inch flow pipes, except that one 2½-inch pipe will give as good results and will be cheaper to install.

A Steady Pressure

will always be maintained in your steam pipes, no matter how the pressure at the boiler fluctuates, if you equip your main lines with these valves. Carry 40 or 50 pounds pressure on the boiler, set the

to carry 5 or 10 pounds on the line and you will always have a reserve in case of a sudden drop in temperature. This valve saves both fuel and worry. Ask for catalogue and particulars.

Kroeschell Boiler, Generator and Heating System INSURE PERFECT RESULTS.

Having promised you a letter as soon as we passed through a good fair test, I consider it now almost timely. Any growers wishing to exhibit new carnations before the club may send them to the exhibition committee, care of Traendly & Schenck, 131 West Twenty-eighth street, New York city, to reach there Monday, February 12, and they will be taken care of by the committee and properly staged at the club rooms."

LILACS FOR EASTER.

Would you kindly give me a little information? I have some double white lilacs in pots, still outside. When shall I bring them in to bloom them for Easter, and what temperature do they need? W. B.

The lilacs should be placed in a cold cellar and stored there until six weeks before Easter. Then give them a temperature of 60 degrees until the flowers are opening, when they should be moved to a somewhat cooler house, in which to expand. This will give the flowers more substance. Syringe freely until the shoots are well started, but be careful not to wet the flowers when open, as they are liable to become discolored. C W.

Another 2½-inch flow pipe should drop down on the north side of the door and connect with a coil of five or six 2-inch pipes, which should run around to a point opposite the heater, where they should be connected in the same way as the return from the other coil. If the pipes all run downhill, there will be no occasion for using air valves.

If, for any reason, the main flow pipe can not be carried up to the height desired until after it has entered the greenhouse, the connection with the expansion tank should still be made at the highest point of the system, and although an elevation of ten feet or more will be desirable, if necessary the tank can be connected directly with the flow pipe.

NOT ENOUGH RADIATION.

I am building a greenhouse, 21x50, running north and south, five feet high to the eaves and eleven feet to the ridge. Please let me know the best way to run the pipes for hot water, to have a temperature of 50 degrees at night. There will be four benches in the house. If I place two 2-inch flows under the ridge, run them to the front, then drop them down and connect with four 1¼-inch returns, which would be under the benches and would enter a 2-inch return to the boiler, would that arrangement be satisfactory? I shall use a Wilks boiler. I am located in western Pennsylvania. H. P. S.

The plan proposed will not supply enough radiating surface, and larger return pipes should be used, unless a circulator is attached to the system. For an open-tank system use one 2½-inch overhead flow pipe and ten 1½-inch returns, and connect the coils to the heater either with one 2½-inch or two 2-inch returns. One of the returns can be on each of the plates and two under each bench. There is no particular objection to the use of two 2-inch flow pipes, except that one 2½-inch pipe will give as good results and will be cheaper to install.

A Steady Pressure

will always be maintained in your steam pipes, no matter how the pressure at the boiler fluctuates, if you equip your main lines with these valves. Carry 40 or 50 pounds pressure on the boiler, set the

WHAT THE USERS SAY ABOUT KROESCHELL BOILERS

Kroeschell Boiler, Generator and Heating System INSURE PERFECT RESULTS.

Having promised you a letter as soon as we passed through a good fair test, I consider it now almost timely. We had the thermometer 18° below zero and we've just gone through a blizzard bad enough for most any season, and am very well pleased to inform you that our heating system was equal to the occasion. So far as we have gone, am certainly well satisfied with the Kroeschell Boiler, Generator and Heating System.

NEW YORK NOTES.

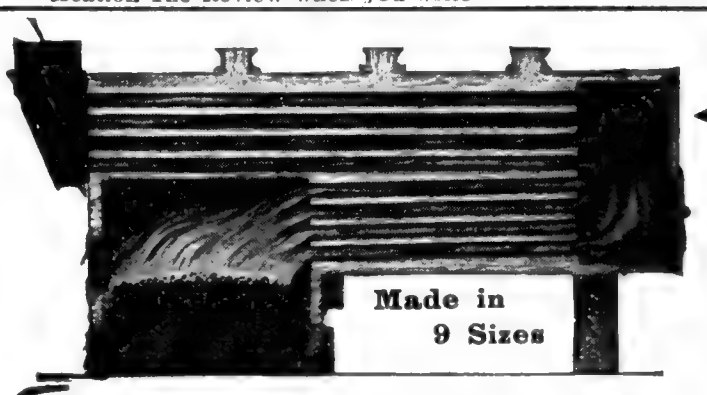
H. Spavins, of Mt. Kisco, is sending P. J. Smith fine blooms of a red seedling carnation he has named Mrs. Moses Taylor.

J. Austin Shaw.

C. C. Thorley is one of a number of florists who have been appointed special deputies by Sheriff Harburger.

A. M. Henshaw secured a judgment, January 16, against the Smart Set Floral Co., for $236.

January 16 a petition in bankruptcy was filed against Abraham Moltz and Maurice L. Glass, who compose the firm of A. Moltz & Co., by these creditors: N. Lecakes & Co., $266; James K. Allen, $172, and Moore, Hentz & Nash, $654. The firm made an assignment January 13.



Isaac S. Hendrickson, chairman of the exhibition committee, asks publication of the following: "Monday night, February 12, has been designated as carnation night by the New York Florists' Club. Any growers wishing to exhibit new carnations before the club may send them to the exhibition committee, care of Traendly & Schenck, 131 West Twenty-eighth street, New York city, to reach there Monday, February 12, and they will be taken care of by the committee and properly staged at the club rooms."

LILACS FOR EASTER.

Would you kindly give me a little information? I have some double white lilacs in pots, still outside. When shall I bring them in to bloom them for Easter, and what temperature do they need? W. B.

The lilacs should be placed in a cold cellar and stored there until six weeks before Easter. Then give them a temperature of 60 degrees until the flowers are opening, when they should be moved to a somewhat cooler house, in which to expand. This will give the flowers more substance. Syringe freely until the shoots are well started, but be careful not to wet the flowers when open, as they are liable to become discolored. C. W.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Bourdet Floral Co., doing both wholesale and retail business, has seventeen greenhouses and 40,000 feet of glass.

More Heating Surface

and less water space than is contained in any other boiler. (Note the many flues set close together.) This is one reason why the users of the find them perfectly satisfactory. We frequently receive re-orders from florists who have tested these boilers thoroughly and found them even "Superior" to our claims.

Why not ask for full particulars today? A postal to us will bring a prompt reply.

BRAMPTON, ONT.

Edward Dale attended the American Rose Society's convention at Detroit, and several of the conventionites stopped at Brampton on their way home. W. Martin, of Portland, Ore., remarked, after he had strolled through the Dale Estate greenhouses for a couple of hours, that it was the first time he had really got his feet thoroughly warm since he had left home.

It seems the general opinion that such consistently severe weather has not been experienced here for fifteen or twenty years. The mercury has dropped below zero, and has remained anywhere from 2 to 22 degrees every day for the last twelve days. Stock is good, however, especially carnations and violets. None of the double violets are grown in any of the Brampton greenhouses now.

Careless handling on the part of the express companies is mainly responsible for more frozen stock during the last fortnight than has ever been known before, and it may easily be understood that this has meant keen disappointment to the city florist, especially when it is considered that flowers are scarce. Business is surprisingly lively for January. W. G. P.

HINSDALE, MASS.

All the dealers in ferns are shipping large quantities and it looks now as if ferns may be scarce the coming spring, as we are losing a large number by spoiling. Perhaps the storage is not to blame so much as some of the pickers. There is such a large number picking in the fall that they are not all as careful as they should be to put good, sound, perfect ferns in the bunches, and they get no better in storage. The fall trade was good in all lines. Between Christmas trees and baled boughs there were nearly a hundred carload lots shipped from here. The weather has been extremely cold here for the greater part of this month, the temperature ranging from zero to 24 degrees below. Some of the shipments of ferns sent from here were partly spoiled by being frozen so hard. There is good sleighing here now.

I wish we could have the S. A. F. meet in Pittsfield in 1913. I am sure all would enjoy it, for it is as nice a little city of 33,000 inhabitants as any in the country. S.

You can talk about the things cold frames will do for you "until the cows come home," but if you want real flowers, real bedding plants that you can count on being top-notch year in and year out—then a greenhouse is the only thing. The only thing, because it is the sure thing. With a greenhouse your frames become doubly valuable, as then one helps the other, greatly to the advantage of both. With a greenhouse you can control temperatures and conditions and can have what you want when you want it. But don't allow anyone ever to persuade you that any other curved-eave house is just as good as the U-Bar. It's not so. We want to show you exactly why. Send for the catalogue as a starter.

MT. KISCO, N Y.

The banquet of the North Westchester Horticultural Society at Castle Inn, Mt. Kisco, January 18, was a great success. The society numbers about sixty members and covers the ground from Katonah to Chappaqua, including almost every gardener of prominence in that section. H. Spavins, the florist at Mt. Kisco, was its secretary for twelve years, and carries a fine gold watch as evidence of the society's appreciation. M. J. O'Brien, manager of the Harriman estate, is the present secretary; George Andrews, president; G. Ganun, treasurer, and F. Kirkman, corresponding secretary. The hotel was nicely decorated for the banquet by Messrs. Andrews, Thomson and Wills. Messrs. Maynard, Rickards, Kennedy, Burnett and McTaggert were the new York visitors, and all gave interesting addresses. Masters William and Robert Burnett, of New York, gave many solos on the piano and violin, and Messrs. Loy and Gifford, of Weehawken, furnished the vocal entertainment, their popular songs being especially appreciated. J. A. Shaw was toastmaster.

FREEPORT, ILL.

On visiting this city, I was gratified to hear that our brother florist, John Bauscher, Jr., who is one of the county supervisors and has personal charge of the money intended for distribution among the destitute, has so ably managed the funds intrusted to him that, for the first time in fifty years, it is not necessary for the county to resort to a special tax levy to take care of the needy. The money at his command has been adequate in spite of the fact that he has had a standing announcement in the local papers, stating that he may be found at his place of business whenever his aid is wanted in the relief of the poor.

A visit to Mr. Bauscher's greenhouses found everything in first-class shape. He grows 38,000 carnation plants, principally of such varieties as Beacon and the different shades of Enchantress. In novelties he has White Wonder, Washington and Princess Charming. In roses he grows American Beauty, Killarney, White Killarney, Bride, Maid, Uncle John, Rhea Reid, Chatenay and Richmond. His trade last Christmas, he says, was the best in his experience.

A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

YONKERS, N. Y.

The Yonkers Horticultural Society's first meeting of the year was held January 5 at the Hollywood Inn, when the newly elected officers filled their respective positions. They are as follows: President, H. Nichols; vice-president, F. Drexler; secretary, L. Taylor; treasurer, P. Macdonald; corresponding secretary, J. W. Watts.

The committee appointed to look after the annual dinner reported progress, and progress was reported by the committee in charge of the spring show. The society is still increasing in membership. Two more, George Norris and William Milliott, were added to the list of active members and William Mills was nominated for membership.

Mr. Milliott had offered prizes for the most meritorious exhibit, which brought out a goodly number of entries. Mr. Nichols won first, with a fine dish of mushrooms; Robert Cochrane, second, with antirrhinums. Mr. Macdonald showed a fine cineraria plant, which was awarded a cultural certificate. Mr. Hoffman won honorary mention with a double nasturtium plant.

The president and Robert Cochrane were appointed as delegates to attend the dinner of the Dobbs Ferry Horticultural Society.

The treasurer's report proved satisfactory, with a balance on hand of $110.71.

The society has decided to hold its annual dinner during the second week in February, and all are looking forward to it, as it is going to be the best the society has ever held. J. H. W.

SOUTH BEND, IND.

The Northern Indiana Florists' Association held its quarterly session here January 17. The plans for entertainment were in charge of the following four local members: Willis W. and Charles F. Kinyon and Paul O. and Wm. R. Beyer.

Officials of the association were most prominent on the program. J. D. Conner, of Wabash, is president; Harry White, of North Manchester, vice-president, and A. J. Wagoner, of Columbia City, secretary-treasurer of the organization. A dinner was served at Kable's north restaurant, on North Michigan street, and was enlivened by a series of addresses and discussions by various members.

ANOTHER SPECIAL FLOWER DAY

RETAILERS' ADVERTISING.

A Favorable Opportunity.

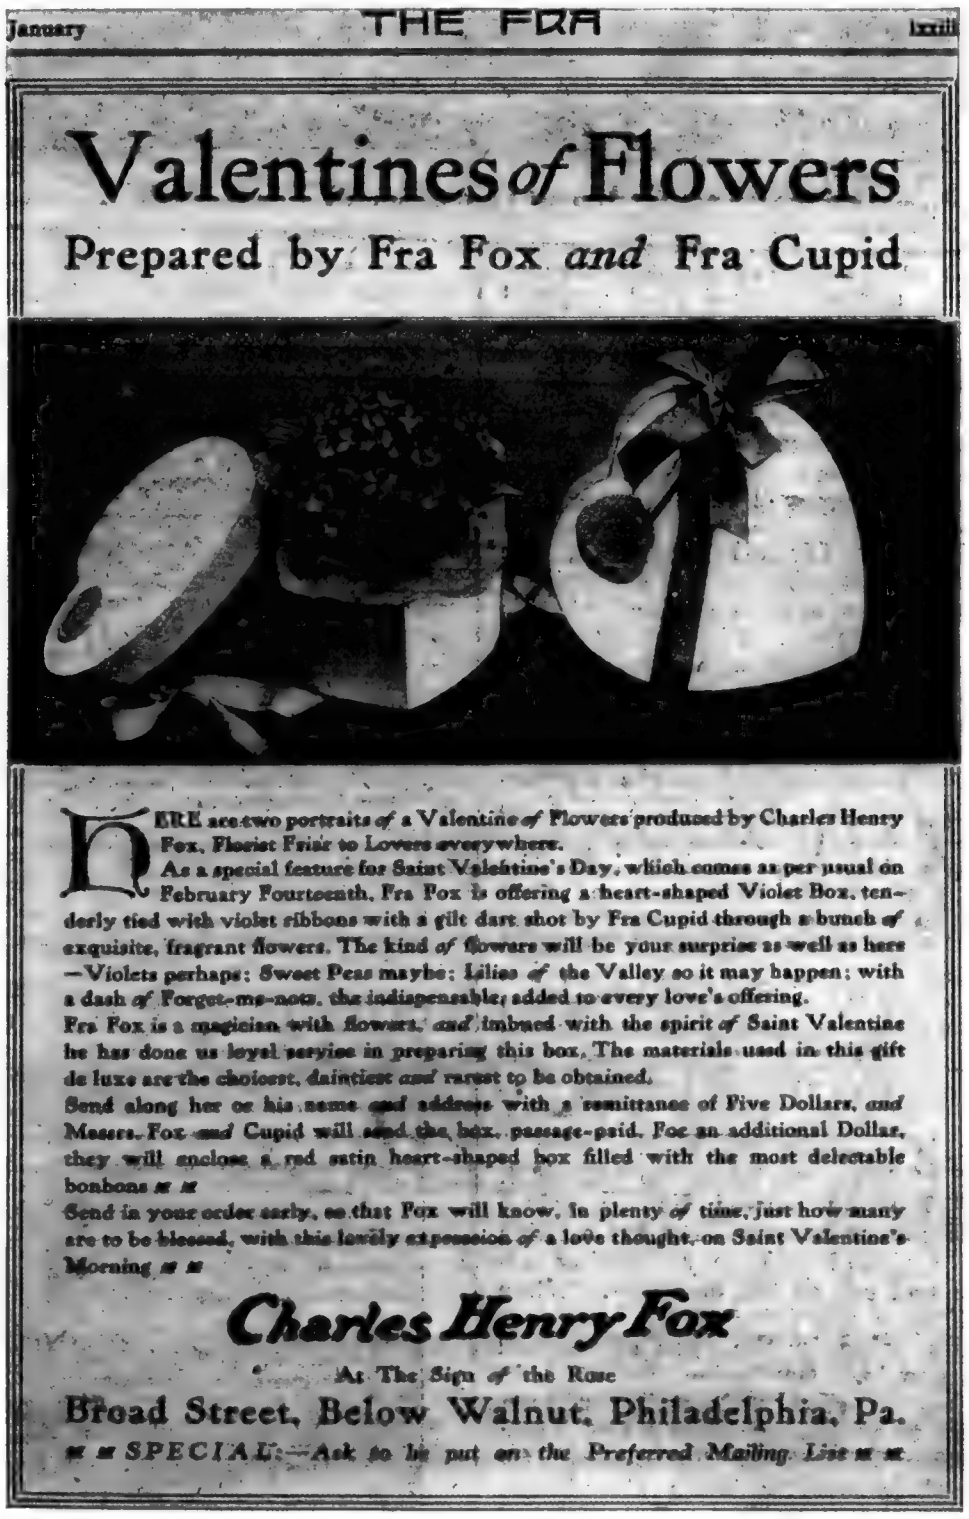
It is at such times as St. Valentine's day that advertising by the retailers has its greatest value: the demand lies right at hand, only awaiting the awakening that comes when the advertisements appear.

St. Valentine's day gives excellent copy material. Many retailers would like to use space in their local papers, only do not know what to say in the space after they have bought it—what to say, that is, that will bring a visible and prompt response. It does not take an expert to frame up an offer of valentine's boxes of cut flowers, or corsage bouquets, that will set the telephone bell ringing and line up the people in the store.

Every retailer ought to do some advertising, for the larger the quantity of such advertising there is seen, the more the public is impressed with the fact that it is the proper thing to make gifts of flowers February 14. What "everybody" does, everybody else must do—and that's what we want in this case.

Mail Orders.

It is possible to get mail orders for St. Valentine's day flowers to be delivered at a distance as well as locally. The accompanying illustration shows how Charles Henry Fox, Philadelphia, does it. The advertisement originally occupied a full page in a magazine of national circulation, The Fra. Because of the eccentric character of the publication, the copy was written to correspond, but the bid for business is plain and to the point. As it may be easier to read in type than in the plate, the text is printed here:



"Here are two portraits of a Valentine of Flowers produced by Charles Henry Fox, Florist Friar to Lovers everywhere.

"As a special feature for Saint Valentine's Day, which comes as per usual on February Fourteenth, Fra Fox is offering a heart-shaped Violet Box, tenderly tied with violet ribbons, with a gilt dart shot by Fra Cupid through a bunch of exquisite, fragrant flowers. The kind of flowers will be your surprise as well as hers—Violets perhaps; Sweet Peas maybe; Lilies of the Valley so it may happen; with a dash of Forget-me-nots, the indispensable, added to every love's offering.

"Fra Fox is a magician with flowers, and imbued with the spirit of Saint Valentine he has done us loyal service in preparing this box. The materials used in this gift de luxe are the choicest, daintiest and rarest to be obtained.

"Send along her or his name and address with a remittance of Five Dollars, and Messrs. Fox and Cupid will send the box, passage-paid. For an additional Dollar, they will enclose a red satin heart-shaped box filled with the most delectable bonbons.

"Send in your order early, so that Fox will know, in plenty of time, just how many are to be blessed, with this lovely expression of a love thought, on Saint Valentine's morning."

Brother Fox Assists Cupid.

ST. VALENTINE'S WINDOWS.

Timely window decorations always are a great help in advertising flowers for any special use and no retailer should fail to make use of the opportunity to feature St. Valentine's day. If the neighboring windows are full of the paper affairs the children delight in, so much the better. Let the public see that people of taste are using flowers and plants as valentines and many new buyers will come in.

Nothing is easier than to put the seasonable touch on the window decoration for the few days before February 14. It is Cupid's day. Therefore use Cupid's weapons and Cupid's targets—bows, arrows and bright red hearts. Fill the window so full of them that their meaning will be plain. The red heart-shaped violet boxes are almost a valentine's decoration in themselves.
